"HA! IT'S A GIRL," SAYS CONSTABLE IN EARLY MORNING AT KUTCHER HOUSE

Expert Testimony of Doughty Monticello Officer Now In Record of "Jack Brown" Case—"Jack" Again Vanishes and Mary Comes Here Looking for "Him"–Summer Boarders Getting Novel Diversion.

Mary Hodowonetz, the New York waitress who applied in the Harlem court in New York city several days ago for a warrant for the arrest of Caroline Schimeck of the town of Ulster, who under the guise of a man and under the name of "Jack Brown" had proposed marriage to her, was in Kingston Thursday afternoon, coming from Monticello, where she went late Wednesday afternoon after being assured that Mrs. Schimeck had made a statement that the "Jack Brown" who was then acting as a waiter at the Kutcher boarding house was none other than her own daughter.

Mary the waitress went to the home of Mrs. Schimeck. She knew that "Jack" had disappeared from Monticello. Possibly she thought that "Jack" might have reached the home of "her" mother on the Kingston-West Hurley road. Evidently the New York city newspaper workers who accompanied her thought so. They talked to Mrs. Schimeck, who told them the same story she had told to a Freeman reporter on Wednesday. Mary said she did not want to arrest "Jack" but merely to talk to "her."

The story of "Jack's" disappearance from the Kutcher boarding house is somewhat interesting. When Mary arrived at Monticello late Wednesday afternoon, she procured the services of a constbale and started for the Kutcher Brothers' boarding house. The two hundred guests at that place had been reading the newspaper accounts of what had happened and had questioned "Jack" the handsome waiter, regarding their truth. "Jack" insisted "he" was a man, and gave similar assurance to the Kutchers. Inasmuch as "Jack" had worked as hard as any laborer they ever employed for three seasons, they saw no reason to doubt the statement.

"Jack" saw Mary and the constable and disappeared. Evidently it was easy to find a hiding place which could not be discovered by Mary or the constable, who searched the premises. Kutcher was assured that "Jack's" mother had made the statement that "Jack" was a girl, and agreed to surrender "Jack" if "he" appeared.

All these proceedings were highly edifying and entertaining to the guests at the Kutcher house, who never before had visited a summer resort which provided similar features, but it was rather disconcerting to the employes and to Mr. Kutcher, who become somewhat peeved when the constable appeared at the house at 1 o'clock Thursday morning and wanted to make another search. They debated the question, but the constable, having the force of the law embodied in him, won his point, and the search was undertaken.

"Jack" was found in "his" room, asleep. "He" was wakened and told that the constable and Mr. Kutcher desired an interview. Attired in "his" pajamas, he retired with the constable and Mr. Kutcher to another room, where the facts regarding the statement made by Mrs. Schimeck were reviewed briefly. The facts stated by Mrs. Schimeck were denied by "Jack." The issue of fact being thus squarely presented, it was apparent there was only one way to decide who was right.

The personnel of the jury was a debatable matter. Most of the Kutcher boarders were asleep but they would have insisted on being called if they had known what was about to take place. It would have been something worth while to remember and talk about in later life. Mr. Kutcher, as owner of the house and "Jack's" employer, is said to have insisted that he should be on the jury, but the constable is said to have insisted with equal vehemence that inasmuch as he was the only person present who had been elected by the people to uphold the law, he was therefore the only person qualified to conduct an official investigation, and the jury should be composed of one and only one person—himself. Argument was of no avail. Once more was the dignity of the law vindicated, the constable "seen his duty and he done it." The women of the house were neither mentioned nor considered in connection with this jury duty.

The proceedings of a jury room almost invariably are locked within the breasts of each individual juror. When the constable emerged from the room a few minutes later he is said to have shown a tendency to go away unobserved, but Mr. Kutcher and others, noting that blushes alternated with a chalky whiteness of the face were not inclined to retire without knowing the verdict.

The verdict said to have been announced by the constable is rather unique in the annals of American investigations: That the jury was an officer of the law and a married man with eleven children and ought to know what he was talking, and to the best of his judgment the woman was right when she said her daughter was a girl.

It was agreed that "Jack" should be ready at seven o'clock Thursday morning to accompany the constable to the town limits and there leave Monticello for parts unknown. The constable was on hand at seven o'clock Thursday morning, but "Jack" was not, and search of "his" room disclosed the fact that "he" had disappeared after "he" had returned to his room, following the announcement of the verdict. "He" had taken with him a suit which had been freshly pressed the day before.

Mary the waitress and the New York newspaper workers left Kingston after they found that "Jack" had not come to Kingston.

On Thursday a number of men who are boarding in Monticello held a parade, each man being attired in his regular clothes over which he had placed his wife's "nightie." Wives of men who did not take part in the parade were said to have refused the use of their silk pajamas.

In making reservations at the Kutcher boarding house for next summer, references probably will be given to former guests.

LONDON LAUDS PREMIER'S COUP

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

London, Aug. 12.—Premier Lloyd-George's successful move to have the Upper Silesian issue referred to the league of nations was hailed in official circles today as his greatest diplomatic victory. The British premier's move came at a time when it appeared certain that there would be an open rupture between France and England and the supreme council would cease entirely to function.

Foreign office officials said they expected the league of nations to act promptly upon the Upper Silesian question and render a decision in September.

President Obregon received the request in the form of a memorial and took it under consideration without giving any definite answer. The president had previously announced that the money from the oil taxes would be applied upon the foreign debt.

AMERICANS RUSH RELIEF TO RUSSIA

Convinced That U. S. Has No Ulterior Motives Soviets Are Expected To Allow Actual Feeding Of Starving To Begin Next Week —Some Americans Not Yet Out Of Russia.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Riga, Aug. 12.—Actual relief work in Russia, under the direction of Americans, will be under way early next week, according to all indications here today.

The negotiations of Walter L. Brown, head of the American relief organization in Europe, and Boris Litvinoff, the envoy of the soviet government, are proceeding favorably and probably will be concluded on Saturday or Sunday. This would enable the relief campaign to open next week as it is expected that the remaining American citizens will be out of Russia in the meantime.

It is predicted that the International Red Cross at Geneva will name Secretary Hoover honorary director of the consolidated relief movements, that is the relief work of various countries and humanitarian organizations.

Dr. Nansen, who is now in Riga and who has won the confidence of all stricken nationalities by his relief crusades of the past two years, probably will become the active chief of the movement in Europe.

The chief fear of M. Litvinoff was that the countries giving relief to Russia might attempt to make political capital out of the work. Some of the nations that have volunteered aid are hostile to the soviet and the Moscow government feared that they would attempt to take advantage of the present opportunity to work for the overthrow of the Lenine-Trotzky administration.

Litvinoff voiced this fear to Director Brown, and it is understood that Mr. Brown gave assurances that the United States had no ulterior motive in Russia. It was pointed out that America has been actuated only by humanitarian motives as has been made evident by her dealings with all nations since the war. Litvinoff said he was under instructions to inform the American relief organization that the soviet government, despite the deplorable conditions in the famine and cholera districts, would not tolerate any political interference with Russian domestic affairs.

While the United States has not shown any friendship for the Moscow government, the Bolshevik leaders were impressed by the disinterestedness of the Americans and felt that they could be trusted.

News is eagerly awaited here of the whereabouts of the remaining Americans who have been released from Russian prisons and are now supposed to be on their way to this city, or some other city on this side of the Russian frontier. It was said yesterday that there were only 21 Americans to be heard from, but today it was reported that there was a greater number of them.

Lettonia has appropriated 5,500,000 roubles for the purchase of grain for the Russian famine sufferers.

DOLLAR DAY MUTUAL SUCCESS

"Bigger and better than ever" was the general expression in regard to the Mid-summer Dollar Day which was held by the progressive merchants of Kingston Thursday. Both merchants and shoppers alike were pleased with the business done. Early Thursday morning the shoppers began to crowd the stores in an effort to "do their shopping early" and get the choicest bargains which were being offered by the various shops and stores.

Residents of Kingston were in the majority during the early hours of the day but with the arrival of the motor bus lines and the morning trains together with hundreds of private automobiles the number of out-of-town shoppers increased until the stores were crowded and the clerks taxed to handle the business.

In the majority of the stores special articles were sold for a dollar while in others where the price was large a deduction of $1 was made on each purchase of $5. Still others offered a 10 per cent reduction from the regular prices.

Every one of the stores did an unusually large business and thousands of careful shoppers profited by the bargains offered for Dollar Day. The general expression of the shoppers was one of pleasure at the bargains offered by the merchants and from the volume of business done by the various stores it was evident that the people appreciated real bargains and took advantage of them when offered.

Elks' Clam Bake.

The bake itself will be an old timer, and will include everything a bake should have. The degree team has charge of the field sports and other entertainment, and further comment is unnecessary. Tickets will be on sale at the club house from Saturday, August 13 to Sunday, August 21, and members are urged to secure them as soon as possible. If reservations are made by telephone the member's name will be placed on the ticket and it will be delivered to him on his request.

MORE EVIDENCE AGAINST BURCH

His Auto Registered Exact Mileage to Spot Where Part of Shotgun With Which Kennedy is Believed to Have Been Killed Was Found—He and Mrs. Obenchain are Indicted.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 12.—Search for the barrels of a double barrelled 12 guage shotgun, believed to be part of the much sought weapon with which J. Belton Kennedy, wealthy young broker, was slain a week ago, was occupying the attention today of all officers working on the mysterious murder case.

With the indictment on first degree murder charges of Arthur C. Burch and Mrs. Madalynne Obenchain, principals in the sensational case, investigators were endeavoring to forge together the links in the chain of evidence.

The missing gun barrels are regarded as an important link in the chain.

Mrs. Obenchain and Burch were named in indictments returned during the night after a grand jury investigation that began early yesterday.

The butt of the shotgun, which officials say they believe is the weapon that sent its charge of death laden buckshot into the brain of young Kennedy a week ago, was found floating in the surf at Santa Monica last Saturday, about sixteen hours after the murder had been committed. The butt was taken from the water by William Wylie, a conductor. In a sworn statement made public today, Wylie asserted that the butt was shiny and only slightly rusted when he retrieved it from the ocean.

Wylie was camping at Santa Monica when he found the gun and he attached no significance to his find until he learned that a corps of divers were searching for the murder gun in the ocean near the abandoned pier. He then turned over his important find. He said the spot where he picked up the gun butt was only a few yards from the old pier.

Officers have been searching for the gun with which Kennedy was killed ever since Burch was taken from an east bound train at Las Vegas, Nevada, and the alleged murder car located. They announced today they believed they would be able to identify this gun butt as that of the weapon with which Kennedy was killed.

The mileage registered on the motor car rented by Burch the night of the murder led deputy sheriffs to take up the search for the murder gun at the beach. The car had been driven 44 miles. Investigation showed the distance from Los Angeles to the Santa Monica pier and return to Los Angeles by the shortest route is exactly 44 miles.

Officers also learned that Burch had rented the car the night before and had driven 45 miles, which led them to believe that the car may have been driven over the same route the night before.

Another angle of the case that came to light today was testimony said to have been given to the grand jury yesterday that Burch had a thorn in his knee when taken from the train at Las Vegas. The thorn was removed, it was said, by Dr. J. J. Finley, who was a witness before the grand jury.

Malcolm McLaren, investigator for the district attorney's office, introduced branches of shrubbery picked at the scene of the murder that bore thorns similar to the one extracted from Burch's knee.

Another important bit of testimony that was given the grand jury was that of a jail surgeon who is said to have stated that Burch's shoulder showed a slight discoloration such as might have been produced by the recoil of a gun. It was on these points of testimony, it is believed, that Burch was indicted.

Mrs. Obenchain was indicted because of a telegram she is said to have sent to Burch two weeks before Kennedy was slain. This telegram, the state contends, read:

"Things look bad here. Please come at once. Madalynne."

Mrs. Obenchain denied sending this telegram and holds that she asked Burch to come here because she believed he "needed a rest and a change."

Although both Burch and Mrs. Obenchain were taken before the grand jury, each refused to testify.

The two defendants, while showing signs of worry, maintained a stoical air of apparent indifference and optimism over their plight today. Burch, when asked if he had heard that he had been indicted, flicked the ash from his cigarette and remarked:

"Well isn't that interesting?"

Buch and Mrs. Obenchain were ordered held without bail and judge Sidney N. Reeve set Monday as the day of their arraignment.

SILESIAN ISSUE TO GO TO COUNCIL

Lloyd-George Wins Another Victory But Rift Between France And Britain Is As Wide As Ever As Premiers Part.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Paris, Aug. 12.—Premier Lloyd-George of England and Premier Briand, of France, today agreed to refer the Upper Silesian question to the next meeting of the league of nations.

This decision was reached as the result of the deadlock that developed yesterday over the partition of Upper Silesia. It was reported in French circles that Premier Briand was willing to reconsider the plan drawn up by Count Sforza of Italy, but subsequently it was decided that a more satisfactory settlement would be to allow the league of nations to handle the issue.

Before deciding to refer the Upper Silesia matter to the league of nations Premier Lloyd-George consulted the Italian and Japanese delegates and received their approval.

The conference between the British and French premiers did not take place until after the ministerial council. After half an hour's conversation, Mr. Lloyd-George and M. Briand agreed to attend a final session of the supreme council beginning shortly after 11 o'clock. The British premier said that he would leave for London as soon as this session ended. His secretary had already booked reservations and packed up the numerous portfolios of documents.

The Sforza plan divided Upper Silesia on the basis that Germany would get most of the industrial and mining district.

There was a council of ministers this morning under the chairmanship of President Millerand to consider the Upper Silesian question. Louis Barthou, former premier, was recalled to Paris to consult with the cabinet.

Premier Lloyd-George announced that he would leave Paris this afternoon, giving as a reason the developments in the Irish situation.

The next meeting of the league of nations will be held in September. The removal of the Upper Silesian issue from the supreme council precludes the possibility of further American participation in the discussions. The United States is represented upon the supreme council, but but is not a member of the league of nations.

For upwards of twenty-four hours the tension between Great Britain and France had been growing. It apparently reached a head late Thursday when the British premier, angered by the unyielding attitude of the French, suddenly announced that he was going home as it was useless to discuss the matter further.

That was the way matters stood this morning when Lloyd-George and Briand met for their final conversation. The British premier made it plain that he would not yield an inch while the French premier said that he could not make any more concessions because he was not authorized to do so.

The supreme council meeting ends in a deadlock with another dispute between England and France which threatens to wreck the entente. For the most part England has her way in the meeting. France had hoped to have the council approve the immediate dispatch of troops to Upper Silesia, but England blocked this.

DOWNTOWN UNOFFICIAL MARKET IS PERMITTED TO RESUME BUSINESS

Petition Signed By Rondout Business Men Results In Board of Public Works Relenting—Won't Have Much Effect on Field Court Market.

Happiness reigns among the business men on the Strand.

The early morning public market is open again—the one that was closed when the public market on Field Court was created.

The early morning market on the Strand in the vicinity of Hasbrouck avenue began several years ago and like Topsy of the story of Uncle Tom's Cabin "just grew" until it had become a much used institution by farmers from Esopus, the town of Ulster, and in the fruit season by fruit growers from the towns of Lloyd and from Marlborough who brought grapes, berries, pears and peaches to this market and disposed of them to peddlers, fruit dealers and grocers.

When the orders were given to the market gardeners and farmers that they would not quit selling at the down town market trouble arose at once, not only among the producers but some of the former patrons were greatly offended as well as the business men, a number of them having profited by sales to the people who visited the market, especially those who had eating places. One of the latter is Harvey Sammons owner of a restaurant on East Strand who averaged about forty breakfasts each morning the market was running. Thursday Mr. Sammons started out with a petition requesting that the market be restored and it was signed by nearly every business man in the down town section, the petition to be brought before the common council at its next meeting.

Thursday evening David Basch, the produce dealer on the dock near the Sleightsburgh ferry slip received word by telephone from a member of the Board of Public Works that he could notify the farmers and market men that they could sell at the early morning market again the same as formerly without any molestation by the police, until action on the petition was taken by the common council.

This morning the market was open again with a few producers who had been notified that they could dispose of their produce as before on The Strand.

The re-establishing of the down-town market according to some of the producers and market gardeners will not only benefit the downtown peddlers, nine-tenths living in that section of the city, and the downtown sellers of vegetables and fruits, but will help the producers who after supplying The Strand market buyers can run their auto trucks to the public market at Field Court and find a market for their unsold commodities.

There is a story that many of the producers and farmers will forsake the Field Court market but this is not a fact as those who have been there each morning selling their produce and have seen that market grow into a success will continue so to do and the one on Field Court will continue to be recognized and considered by them as the public market of the City of Kingston.

"HA! IT'S A GIRL," SAYS CONSTABLE IN EARLY MORNING AT KUTCHER HOUSE

Expert Testimony of Doughty Monticello Officer Now In Record of "Jack Brown" Case—"Jack" Again Vanishes and Mary Comes Here Looking for "Him"—Summer Boarders Getting Novel Diversion.

When the constable emerged from the room a few minutes later he is said to have shown a tendency to go away unobserved, but Mr. Kutcher and others, noting that blushes alternated with a chalky whiteness of the face were not inclined to retire without knowing the verdict.

The verdict said to have been announced by the constable is rather unique in the annals of American investigations: That the jury was an officer of the law and a married man with eleven children and meant to know what he was talking, and to the best of his judgment the woman was right when she said her daughter was a girl.

It was agreed that "Jack" should be ready at seven o'clock Thursday morning to accompany the constable to the town hustle and there leave Monticello for parts unknown. The constable was on hand at seven o'clock Thursday morning, but "Jack" was not, and search of "his" room disclosed the fact that "he" had disappeared after "he" had returned to his room, following the announcement of the verdict. "He" had taken with him a suit which had been freshly pressed the day before.

Mary the waitress and the New York newspaper workers left Kingston after they found that "Jack" had not come to Kingston.

On Thursday a number of men who are boarding in Monticello held a parade, each man being attired in his regular clothes over which he had placed his wife's "nightie." Wives of men who did not take part in the parade were said to have refused the use of their silk pajamas.

In making reservations at the Kutcher boarding house for next summer, references probably will be given to former guests.

PROCLAMATION OF PEACE READY

Washington, Aug. 12.—The presidential proclamation of a state of peace with Germany has been drawn and can be issued any time the president deems desirable, it was learned today.

Although officials deny that the issuance of the proclamation is being held up until after the treaty with Germany is consummated, the proclamation probably will not be issued until there is some definite development in the treaty negotiations.

The treaty negotiations were officially described today as "going forward in a very satisfactory manner," but officials declined to elaborate on the statement or to indicate the character of the negotiations.

LONDON LAUDS PREMIER'S COUP

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

London, Aug. 12.—Premier Lloyd-George's successful move to have the Upper Silesian issue referred to the league of nations was hailed in official circles today as his greatest diplomatic victory. The British premier's move came at a time when it appeared certain that there would be an open rupture between France and England and the supreme council would cease entirely to function.

Foreign office officials said they expected the league of nations to act promptly upon the Upper Silesian question and render a decision in September.

Mexico City, Aug. 12.—The governors of fifteen Mexican states called upon President Obregon at Chapultepec Castle today and requested that 50 per cent of the government oil taxes be given to them in return for which the states would cooperate with the federal government in reorganizing the railways. President Obregon received the request in the form of a memorial and took it under consideration without giving any definite answer. The president had previously announced that the money from the oil taxes would be applied upon the foreign debt.

AMERICANS RUSH RELIEF TO RUSSIA

Convinced That U. S. Has No Ulterior Motives Soviets Are Expected To Allow Actual Feeding Of Starving To Begin Next Week—Some Americans Not Yet Out Of Russia.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Riga, Aug. 12.—Actual relief work in Russia, under the direction of Americans, will be under way early next week, according to all indications here today.

The negotiations of Walter L. Brown, head of the American relief organization in Europe, and Boris Litvinoff, the envoy of the soviet government, are proceeding favorably and probably will be concluded on Saturday or Sunday. This would enable the relief campaign to open next week as it is expected that the remaining American citizens will be out of Russia in the meantime.

It is predicted that the International Red Cross at Geneva will name Secretary Hoover honorary director of the consolidated relief movements, that is the relief work of various countries and humanitarian organizations.

Dr. Nansen, who is now in Riga and who has won the confidence of all stricken nationalities by his relief crusades of the past two years, probably will become the active chief of the movement in Europe.

The chief fear of M. Litvinoff was that the countries giving relief to Russia might attempt to make political capital out of the work. Some of the nations that have volunteered aid are hostile to the soviet and the Moscow government feared that they would attempt to take advantage of the present opportunity to work for the overthrow of the Lenine-Trotzky administration.

Litvinoff voiced this fear to Director Brown, and it is understood that Mr. Brown gave assurances that the United States had no ulterior motive in Russia. It was pointed out that America has been actuated only by humanitarian motives as has been made evident by her dealings with all nations since the war. Litvinoff said he was under instructions to inform the American relief organization that the soviet government, despite the deplorable conditions in the famine and cholera districts, would not tolerate any political interference with Russian domestic affairs.

While the United States has not shown any friendship for the Moscow government, the Bolshevik leaders were impressed by the disinterestedness of the Americans and felt that they could be trusted.

News is eagerly awaited here of the whereabouts of the remaining Americans who have been released from Russian prisons and are now supposed to be on their way to this city, or some other city on this side of the Russian frontier. It was said yesterday that there were only 21 Americans to be heard from, but today it was reported that there was a greater number of them.

Lettonia has appropriated 5,500,000 roubles for the purchase of grain for the Russian famine sufferers.

DOLLAR DAY MUTUAL SUCCESS

"Bigger and better than ever" was the general expression in regard to the Mid-summer Dollar Day which was held by the progressive merchants of Kingston, Thursday. Both merchants and shoppers alike were pleased with the business done. Early Thursday morning the shoppers began to crowd the stores in an effort to "do their shopping early" and get the choicest bargains which were being offered by the various shops and stores.

Residents of Kingston were in the majority during the early hours of the day but with the arrival of the motor bus lines and the morning trains together with hundreds of private automobiles the number of out-of-town shoppers increased until the stores were crowded and the clerks taxed to handle the business.

In the majority of the stores special articles were sold for a dollar while in others where the price was large a deduction of $1 was made on each purchase of $5. Still others offered a 10 per cent reduction from the regular prices.

Every one of the stores did an unusually large business and thousands of careful shoppers profited by the bargains offered for Dollar Day. The general expression of the shoppers was one of pleasure at the bargains offered by the merchants and from the volume of business done by the various stores it was evident that the people appreciated real bargains and took advantage of them when offered.

If reservations are made by telephone the member's name will be placed on the ticket and it will be delivered to him on his request.

MORE EVIDENCE AGAINST BURCH

His Auto Registered Exact Mileage to Spot Where Part of Shotgun With Which Kennedy is Believed to Have Been Killed Was Found—He and Mrs. Obenchain are Indicted.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 12.—Search for the barrels of a double barrelled 12 guage shotgun, believed to be part of the much sought weapon with which J. Belton Kennedy, wealthy young broker, was slain a week ago, was occupying the attention today of all officers working on the mysterious murder case.

With the indictment on first degree murder charges of Arthur C. Burch and Mrs. Madalynne Obenchain, principals in the sensational case, investigators were endeavoring to forge together the links in the chain of evidence.

The missing gun barrels are regarded as an important link in the chain.

Mrs. Obenchain and Burch were named in indictments returned during the night after a grand jury investigation that began early yesterday.

The butt of the shotgun, which officials say they believe is the weapon that sent its charge of death laden buckshot into the brain of young Kennedy a week ago, was found floating in the surf at Santa Monica last Saturday, about sixteen hours after the murder had been committed. The butt was taken from the water by William Wylie, a conductor. In a sworn statement made public today, Wylie asserted that the butt was shiny and only slightly rusted when he retrieved it from the ocean.

Wylie was camping at Santa Monica when he found the gun and he attached no significance to his find until he learned that a corps of divers were searching for the murder gun in the ocean near the abandoned pier. He then turned over his important find. He said the spot where he picked up the gun butt was only a few yards from the old pier.

Officers have been searching for the gun with which Kennedy was killed ever since Burch was taken from an east bound train at Las Vegas, Nevada, and the alleged murder car located. They announced today they believed they would be able to identify this gun butt as that of the weapon with which Kennedy was killed.

The mileage registered on the motor car rented by Burch the night of the murder led deputy sheriffs to take up the search for the murder gun at the beach. The car had been driven 44 miles. Investigation showed the distance from Los Angeles to the Santa Monica pier and return to Los Angeles by the shortest route is exactly 44 miles.

Officers also learned that Burch had rented the car the night before and had driven 45 miles, which led them to believe that the car may have been driven over the same route the night before.

Another angle of the case that came to light today was testimony said to have been given to the grand jury yesterday that Burch had a thorn in his knee when taken from the train at Las Vegas. The thorn was removed, it was said, by Dr. J. J. Finley, who was a witness before the grand jury.

Malcolm McLaren, investigator for the district attorney's office, introduced branches of shrubbery picked at the scene of the murder that bore thorns similar to the one extracted from Burch's knee.

Another important bit of testimony that was given the grand jury was that of a jail surgeon who is said to have stated that Burch's shoulder showed a slight discoloration such as might have been produced by the recoil of a gun. It was on these points of testimony, it is believed, that Burch was indicted.

Mrs. Obenchain was indicted because of a telegram she is said to have sent to Burch two weeks before Kennedy was slain. This telegram, the state contends, read:

"Things look bad here. Please come at once. Madalynne."

Mrs. Obenchain denied sending this telegram and holds that she asked Burch to come here because she believed he "needed a rest and a change."

Although both Burch and Mrs. Obenchain were taken before the grand jury, each refused to testify.

The two defendants, while showing signs of worry, maintained a mental air of apparent indifference and optimism over their plight today. Burch, when asked if he had heard that he had been indicted, flicked the ash from his cigarette and remarked:

"Well isn't that interesting."

Burch and Mrs. Obenchain were ordered held without bail and judge Sidney N. Keetcham set Monday as the day of their arraignment.

SILESIAN ISSUE TO GO TO COUNCIL

Lloyd-George Wins Another Victory But Rift Between France And Britain Is As Wide As Ever As Premiers Part.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Paris, Aug. 12.—Premier Lloyd-George of England and Premier Briand, of France, today agreed to refer the Upper Silesian question to the next meeting of the league of nations.

This decision was reached as the result of the deadlock that developed yesterday over the partition of Upper Silesia. It was reported in French circles that Premier Briand was willing to recousider the plan drawn up by Count Sforza of Italy, but subsequently it was decided that a more satisfactory settlement would be to allow the league of nations to handle the issue.

Before deciding to refer the Upper Silesia matter to the league of nations Premier Lloyd-George consulted the Italian and Japanese delegates and received their approval.

The conference between the British and French premiers did not take place until after the ministerial council. After half an hour's conversation, Mr Lloyd-George and M Briand agreed to attend a final session of the supreme council beginning shortly after 11 o'clock. The British premier said that he would leave for London as soon as this session ended. His secretary had already booked reservations and packed up the numerous portfolios of documents.

The Sforza plan divided Upper Silesia on the basis that Germany would get most of the industrial and mining district.

There was a council of ministers this morning under the chairmanship of President Millerand to consider the Upper Silesian question. Louis Barthou, former premier, was recalled to Paris to consult with the cabinet.

Premier Lloyd-George announced that he would leave Paris this afternoon, giving as a reason the developments in the Irish situation.

The next meeting of the league of nations will be held in September. The removal of the Upper Silesian issue from the supreme council precludes the possibility of further American participation in the discussions. The United States is represented upon the supreme council, but but is not a member of the league of nations.

For upwards of twenty-four hours the tension between Great Britain and France had been growing. It apparently reached a head late Thursday when the British premier, angered by the unyielding attitude of the French, suddenly announced that he was going home as it was useless to discuss the matter further.

That was the way matters stood this morning when Lloyd-George and Briand met for their final conversation. The British premier made it plain that he would not yield an inch while the French premier said that he could not make any more concessions because he was not authorized to do so.

The supreme council meeting ends in a deadlock with another dispute between England and France which threatens to wreck the entente. For the most part England has her way in the meeting. France had hoped to have the council approve the immediate dispatch of troops to Upper Silesia, but England blocked this.

DOWNTOWN UNOFFICIAL MARKET IS PERMITTED TO RESUME BUSINESS

Petition Signed By Rondout Business Men Results In Board of Public Works Relenting—Won't Have Much Effect on Field Court Market.

Happiness reigns among the business men on the Strand.

The early morning public market is open again—the one that was closed when the public market on Field Court was created.

The early morning market on the Strand in the vicinity of Hasbrouck avenue began several years ago and like Topsy of the story of Uncle Tom's Cabin "just grew" until it had become a much used institution by farmers from Esopus, the town of Ulster, and in the fruit season by fruit growers from the towns of Lloyd and from Marlborough who brought grapes, berries, pears and peaches to this market and disposed of them to peddlers, fruit dealers and grocers.

When the orders were given to the market gardeners and farmers that they would not quit selling at the down town market trouble arose at once, not only among the producers but some of the former patrons were greatly offended as well as the business men, a number of them having profited by sales to the people who visited the market, especially those who had eating places. One of the latter is Harvey Sammons owner of a restaurant on East Strand who averaged about forty breakfasts each morning the market was running. Thursday Mr. Sammons started out with a petition requesting that the market be restored and it was signed by nearly every business man in the down town section, the petition to be brought before the common council at its next meeting.

Thursday evening David Basch, the produce dealer on the dock near the Sleightsburgh ferry slip received word by telephone from a member of the Board of Public Works that he could notify the farmers and market men that they could sell at the early morning market again the same as formerly without any molestation by the police, until action on the petition was taken by the common council.

This morning the market was open again with a few producers who had been notified that they could dispose of their produce as before on The Strand.

The re-establishing of the downtown market according to some of the producers and market gardeners will not only benefit the downtown peddlers, nine-tenths living in that section of the city, and the downtown sellers of vegetables and fruits, but will help the producers who after supplying The Strand market buyers can run their auto trucks to the public market at Field Court and find a market for their unsold commodities.

There is a story that many of the producers and farmers will forsake the Field Court market but this is not a fact as those who have been there each morning selling their produce and have seen that market grow into a success will continue so to do and the one on Field Court will continue to be recognized and considered by them as the public market of the City of Kingston.

MICHELS PLEADS NOT GUILTY

In the city court this morning Casper Michels was arraigned before City Judge Harry Schirick on a charge of selling on August 4 to William F. Hanley, a sergeant of the local police force at his place of business, 487 Delaware avenue a glass of intoxicating liquor for beverage purpose, namely some beer of over one per cent of alcoholic content. Michels pleaded not guilty and waived examination to appear for the grand jury. Bail in $1,000 was given. Charles Snyder of Delaware avenue and Henry P. Kelsch of New street furnished the bond. District Attorney Frederick G. Traver appeared for The People; Andred J. Cook for the defendant.

Other cases in city court that were called were Harry E. Hasbrouck of New York charged with speeding his automobile on August 7, did not appear and his cash bail of $10 declared forfeited. NURSE FOG.

"Ah," said Nurse Fog, to the Mist Grandchildren, "I am going to take a trip today and as I travel about I shall wear my great flowing shawl so that all over the places where I go there will be a good old fog!

Hiding the Tops.

"Now there is a boat taking a trip down along the coast and upon the boat are people who're going to their summer cottages nearby.

"They're going to live by the ocean and they're going to have a fine summer bathing and boating and digging in the sand.

"There is a big gray cat on the boat too. He is going away for the summer.

"He won't care for the bathing and the boating and the digging in the sand but he is planning pleasant naps in the warm summer sunshine. That is what he is looking forward to more than anything else.

"But Mist Grandchildren, I must tell you what I'm doing today. I'm hiding the tops of the high buildings in the city we've just left.

"Yes, those high buildings are much too proud. They think they are so tall and so wonderful but I'm showing them that Nurse Fog is even more wonderful. I'm hiding their great tall towers with my Fog cape.

"No one could tell that the buildings were so high if they only looked at them today.

"For today I am letting the lower parts of the buildings be seen but I'm hiding the top parts. I'm hiding their great height; yes, I am!"

And Nurse Fog laughed a low, hoarse laugh.

"Old Mother Ocean is laughing at me, and as she laughs she moves about and all the boats are rolling from side to side. But Mother Ocean says if they will travel over her face as they do they can't stop her from laughing, but she must go straight ahead and laugh when she feels like it.

"That is what she is doing today.

"Of course the buoys are warning ships that I'm about. And the bells on the buoys strike with every little move old Mother Ocean makes. That is to warn ships where they are and that they must be very careful.

"Every time old Mother Ocean laughs the buoys move and the bells knock against the side of the buoys and ring their warning sounds.

"The old tug boats are going straight ahead and not paying any attention to old Mother Ocean and her laughing. They have work to do and they go ahead and do it, like the fine little workers that they are.

"They don't look very handsome but they do lots of good work and are splendid little boats.

"The boats are all blowing their whistles and their horns, and letting other boats know where they are, so none of them will bump into each other.

"They are all being very careful and not letting any accidents happen. The boats are always like that.

"But ah, Mist Grandchildren, it's your old Nurse Fog, who is making them do all this extra work.

"There are boats carrying food and others carrying coal and others carrying passengers and they all must warn each other that they are about. They wouldn't have to do so much warning if old Nurse Fog didn't happen to be about!

Here Comes the Storm King.

"The Sea-gulls don't mind us! They're flying about and having a fine time. Mr. Buff Colored Seagull is enjoying the storm, he says. He is sitting on top of one of the anchor posts and is watching the storm.

"Yes, the old Storm King is about too. And he has decided he would like to have a talk with me. He has just been flitting about from place to place so the storm, so far, hasn't been so bad.

"But he wants to have a talk with me now, and I will be glad to talk to him.

"So, Mist Grandchildren, old Nurse Fog and the Storm King will have a talk, and now Mother Ocean will laugh at our jokes, and as she laughs how she will toss and roll for she simply roars with laughter at our jokes. Here comes the Storm King now!"

Yes, or Mittens.

Teacher (after lesson on snow): "As we walk out on a cold winter day and look around, what do we see on every hand?"

Pupil: "Gloves!"

Stories of Great Scouts

By Elmo Scott Watson

© Western Newspaper Union.

CAPTAIN SAM BRADY AND HIS FAMOUS LEAP

Capt. Sam Brady was a member of a fighting family which made history on the Pennsylvania border during the Indian wars after the Revolution. Captain Brady's greatest exploit took place in Ohio. He had been captured by the Indians and carried to the Sandusky Towns, headquarters for all the Ohio tribes, where the savages prepared to burn him at the stake.

He was stripped, bound to a post and slow fires kindled around him, for the Indians hated him so much that they wished to torture him as long as possible. Brady was a powerful man and he strained at his fetters until they were loosened slightly. Then with a final effort he snapped the last bond, leaped across the barrier of flame and, seizing a squaw, pitched her into the fire.

Before the Indians could recover from their surprise, the scout escaped from the village and plunged into the woods, hotly pursued by hundreds of savages. Finally he came to the Cuyahoga river, near the present site of Kent in Portage county.

At this place the river flowed between steep, rocky banks, 22 feet across from side to side. The scout was trapped. There was no other place for miles up and down the river where he could ford it. The Indians were closing in on him and his only chance of escape was to try to leap across the chasm.

Brady could hear the savages yelling in the woods only a short distance away as he ran back toward them to get a good start. Then turning, he sped for the brink and putting all his failing strength into a final spurt, he sprang for the opposite cliff. His jump was a little short and he struck the bank a few feet below the edge. The Indians stopped in amazement, then as the scout scrambled up over the edge, they opened fire.

They wounded him in the leg, delaying his flight, and in a short time were on his heels again. He came to a lake and plunged in. Stooping beneath the broad pads of a water lily, he breathed through a hollow reed while the savages hunted in vain on the shores of the lake. They found his bloody trail to the water's edge and, believing that he had drowned rather than be captured again, gave up the chase.

Soon afterward Brady reached Fort Pitt in safety. He had many more thrilling adventures before his death on Christmas day, 1795, but his 22-foot leap across the Cuyahoga was the greatest feat of all.

TASTY TIDBITS.

When you have several pieces of cheese, too dry to serve in ordinary ways, grate it and to a cupful of grated cheese add one-half cupful of boiling cream; stir until the cheese is dissolved, add cayenne and paprika salt, if needed, and pour into a cream cheese jar. The cheese will be creamy and delicious and the bits will be saved for something worth while.

Cheese Salad.—Take a cream cheese or two, add thick sweet cream to soften, season with chopped chives, green pepper and nuts. Make into balls and serve on lettuce with a good boiled dressing.

Cottage cheese served plain, after it has been enriched with cream and such seasonings as are needed, served with a good boiled dressing, makes a most tasty salad.

Cheese, Savory.—To one cream cheese add a tablespoonful of softened butter, one teaspoonful of chives, one-half teaspoonful of parsley, both chopped; one-third of a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce and anchovy essence, with salt and paprika to taste. Press into a glass and serve from time to time with crackers.

Cheese Croquettes.—To three tablespoonfuls of melted butter add one-third of a cupful of flour and stir until well blended, then pour on gradually one cupful of milk. Bring to the boiling point and add the yolks of two eggs slightly beaten and diluted with two tablespoonfuls of cream and two cupfuls of mild cheese cut in small cubes. Season with three-fourths of a teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of pepper (red) and spread on a plate to cool as soon as the mixture is smooth. When cool, shape, dip in crumbs, egg and fry in deep fat.

Cheese Supper Dish.—Spread bread with butter and sprinkle with grated cheese. Arrange in layers until the required amount fills the baking dish. Pour over a pint of milk mixed with two beaten eggs, a little salt and over the top a generous sprinkling of paprika. Bake until the custard is set. Serve from the dish.

"Lis'sen, Peggy—every mudder gives her kiddies KELLOGG'S because you can eat great big bowls an' they taste good-er an' they're all crispy an' dandy!"

YOU never tasted Corn Flakes so joyously flavored, so crispy-crunchy as Kellogg's

That's why big and little folks who know the difference insist upon KELLOGG'S! The thing to do is to make comparison—Kellogg's against any other kind of corn flakes you ever ate! If it's quality, or all-the-time crispness or delicious or appetizing flavor you want—well, just wait till you eat Kellogg's!

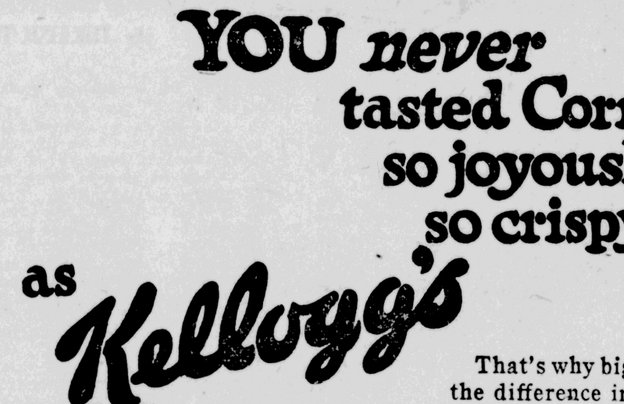

You'll get so cheerful about Kellogg's that the day's best hours will be when it's time to sit down with the family in front of generous bowls all filled most to bursting with those big, sunny brown Corn Flakes!

Never was a better time than tomorrow morning to prove to his taste and their tastes as well as your own that KELLOGG'S Corn Flakes are about the "gladdest of all good things to eat!"

Insist upon KELLOGG'S—if you want to know how wonderfully good corn flakes can be!

IN EVENING TOGS

The Greek idea is firmly established in summer evening dresses. There has been considerable talk of flaring skirts, and a number of them have made their appearance in the shops, but, as predicted, cites a fashion critic, they have proven to be only a whim of fashion, and the straight-line dress still is triumphant. It would be impossible in the entire annals of fashion to find anything more beautiful than the clothes built on the natural lines of the body.

While dresses for daytime wear may be on perfectly straight lines, some draping usually is required for models designed for the evening, and in these we are becoming more familiar with the beauty of Greek drapery at its best—that is, when the cloth was laid in natural folds.

There is no more reason why an evening frock, any more than one intended for the morning, should be fussy. Happily, the days when this was considered necessary are passed.

Nothing could be lovelier than the white and silver evening dresses created for this summer. They are very straight of line and high of neck in the front, but with the decolletage cut extremely low in the back and standing away from the body in some mysterious way, so that while the front of the neck appears to fit rather snugly the back is loose.

The dresses themselves are much like the continuously popular chemise, except that they are draped slightly to the figure at the sides. A wide sash of the white fabric, which usually is a soft silk, may girdle such a frock at a low line. From this sash fall loops of the silk the same width as the sash and lined with silver cloth, as is the girdle, which ties in the back and hangs as many inches below the skirt as desired. If the dress is intended for formal wear the ends of the sash may form square or pointed trains. Both emerald green crepe de chine and silver and bright cerise colored silk and silver have been attractively worked out in these simpler models.

MAKING THE MENDING EASY

Have Set of Pegs Conveniently Spaced on Board to Accommodate Spools and Balls.

The best possible way to keep spools of thread and mending cotton is on a set of pegs that will fit into the hole in the middle of the spool or ball. You can buy these, though the spool holders offered for sale usually have only three or four pegs. You should have at least a dozen. A good homemade device is to get a narrow, smooth board, perhaps 15 inches long and three or four inches wide. This you may make smooth by finishing it with enamel paint. In this you should drive long, heavy nails an inch and a half apart. You might drive two rows of these if your board is wide enough. Drive them just far enough in to make them secure. On these nails you can place your threads and mending cottons.

A few hours more would be sufficient time to devote to making an excellent mending paraphernalia with a convenient place for keeping mending needles, scissors, tapes, buttons and the various other essentials of mending.

FROM 'FAIRYLAND' SHE COMES

Two heavy rows of rose satin ruching are the sole adornment of this simple little summer frock from "Fairyland" of Paris. A lightweight silk of pure white makes the body of the garment.

Negligent of Their Duties.

It is said that only about 30 per cent of the people of London fulfill their voting privileges.

CHARMING ENGLISH CREATION

TUB SILK FROCK IS POPULAR

Among the most charming of the warm weather frocks shown this year may be mentioned those made of soft, washable silks. These silks come in light colors, and more often than not in gingham patterns. Checks and stripes of various widths are featured, the background usually being white. The material launders beautifully and generally gives excellent service. The tendency is to fashion the tub silk frocks on somewhat tailored lines.

The regulation frock made of tub silk in the checked pattern and piped in color to match the check, or if this is a color, such as blue, green or red, a black piping may be used if preferred. The belt is of white kid trimmed in bright colored or black patent leather, and the shoes carry out the same color scheme. A little vestee, often of white knitted silk, organdie or other cotton material, is a part of the design.

Tub silk makes an ideal frock for wear at home during the summer months, as it is so soft that it does not wrinkle at all and will stand a good deal of wear without retubbing.

WAY TO LAUNDER SWEATERS

Garment Should Be Cleansed by Squeezing, Lifting Up and Down, and Not Stretched.

Free the sweater from all loose dust, then measure and write down the length and width of the front and back, length of shoulder and length of sleeves along the seam.

Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of white soap flakes in a half cupful of boiling water and stir into a gallon of warm water (for colored garments the water should be cooler than for white).

Put in the sweater and wash by squeezing and lifting up and down in the soapy water, taking care not to stretch it. Do not rub. Rinse in several waters of the same temperature as the wash water, and for white sweaters add a very little bluing to the last rinse water. Squeeze between the hands, roll in a Turkish towel and squeeze again to remove as much water as possible.

Set a table outdoors in the shade and cover it with a folded sheet. On this lay the sweater with the back next the sheet and draw the fronts together and the sleeves straight out. Verify all measurements and if necessary stretch and pin the sweater into shape. When partly dry, turn the other side up.

LACE IN BLACK AND WHITE

Panels, loops or draperies that hang below the skirt give an effect of fullness without actually widening the skirt, as they also give the appearance of greater length, although in many instances the length of the skirt has not been increased. For fashion has quite definitely decided that skirts must be lengthened, and has also made an unsuccessful struggle to widen them.

Laces lend themselves well to looped effects, although they bring us to a slightly different sort of evening dress from the simple crepe de chine things. While the lines may be similar and the draping done in much the same way, the effect cannot fail to be dissimilar, because the fabrics are so unlike.

There is a tendency to react from the dyed laces, although this does not mean that they are not used. Quantities of them still are seen, but they appear a bit garish beside the black-and-white combinations or the frocks in all white or entirely of jet black lace.

Spanish blond laces still are in frequent demand. They make pleasing semi-evening dresses for midsummer, to be worn with transparent brown hats.

Comets Disease Carriers.

Scientists now declare that comets carry live disease germs. They further state that it is possible for these germs to travel to the earth from other worlds on the tails of comets.

Mysteries Concerning Melting Pot.

Certain metals, which melt only at rather high temperatures, may be mixed with each other in certain proportions and will then melt at very low temperatures. That is how some solders are made. Tin melts at 449.6 degrees Fahrenheit, lead at 640 degrees Fahrenheit, bismuth at 514.4 degrees Fahrenheit, and calcium at 608 degrees Fahrenheit. But if you mix eight parts of bismuth with five parts of lead and three parts of tin (by weight), the alloy will melt in boiling water (212 degrees Fahrenheit). If you mix six parts of bismuth, one part of lead, two parts of tin and two parts of cadmium, it will melt in 158 degrees Fahrenheit. And if you want any alloy that will melt at 140 degrees, you have only to mix four parts of tin, eight parts of lead, fifteen parts of bismuth and three parts of cadmium.

Indiscreet Speech.

The little shoe shop was hot and overcrowded, and the woman had to wait in line to be waited on. Just ahead of her a voluble lady was discoursing on the subject of a sensible footwear and illustrating her lecture by a small, high-heeled shoe she had picked up from the counter. "Now just look at that," she said, scornfully. "It was never made for any human foot. No sane woman would dream of wearing it." And she glanced righteously at her own No. 7 commonsense boots. "I'd like to see its owner." "You can madam, if you glance behind you. For, if you'll permit me to take the one you have, I'll get Joe to wrap up my pair." And the tiny little creature in pongee who reached for the offending pump added a bit vindictively: "I'm still sane enough to know my own when I see them."—New York Evening Sun.

Cannibals' Odd Dueling Custom.

The Pangwes, a cannibal tribe of Africa, had an odd way of settling disputes with neighboring tribes. When they wished to settle a point they sent word to the tribe with which they had dispute, and the tribe selected 20 men, the Pangwes a similar number. These constituted the "armies" that were to settle the dispute. Both "armies" then repaired to an island in the river, set their canoes adrift, completely cutting themselves off from any assistance, and went to it. They hunted each other down through the trees and fought until all but one man was killed. The tribe to which this sole survivor belonged was the victor, and to it belonged all the dead on the island. The victorious tribe then carried off the dead, friend and foe alike, and feasted for eight or ten days.

Largest Animal.

Most boys have seen pictures of the huge lizard which roamed the earth millions of year ago, and is supposed to be the largest animal which ever lived. Searchers in Utah have discovered some bones of an animal which was twice the size of this great prehistoric animal. A hole 600 feet long and 80 feet deep had been dug when some one claimed the land. The government thereupon created a national dinosaur monument, comprising the locality, which will be protected until the investigations are finished. The work is being directed by the Carnegie institute, which discovered and assembled the skeleton of the familiar dinosaur.—Boys' Life.

South Wales Funeral Custom.

In some parts of South Wales the local burial custom is that friends and neighbors of the deceased should take turns in carrying the coffin on their shoulders to the churchyard, no matter how far away. To take part in this kindly act is regarded at once as a privilege to the bearer and as a mark of esteem for the dead and for the bereaved family. The custom itself is reasonably supposed to have arisen from the fact that until recently the roughness of most hill tracks prevented wheeling vehicles from approaching hill farms at all.—Detroit News.

Flowers Express Hope.

There are three flowers which send out the message of hope, remarks the Detroit News. One is the flowering almond and the others are the hawthorn and snowdrop. The flowering almond is a little shrub which grows from two to three feet in height and blooms in May. The color of the flower is a pinkish white. The petals are small and numerous, like the daisy or the chrysanthemum. The hawthorn is generally white, rose colored or sometimes deep crimson. It bears a small fruit with a yellow pulp. The leaf is similar to that of the oak and is cup shaped and spreads as it becomes mature. The hawthorn is often called "May" from the season of blooming in England, and it is also called whitethorn to distinguish it from the sloe, or blackthorn. The snowdrop is so called from the color of the flower. The root of the snowdrop produces two leaves and one single flower, which is bell shaped, and hangs like a bell or the Dutchman's breeches.

Playing Life's Game.

The game of life is not unlike the struggle on the football gridiron. It has all types of players. Some play for the mere fun of muscular struggle, others play for the joy of winning. Some play because others play. Some play because they have no other demand upon their time. Still others feel that their very joy in living is bound up in the right to exercise and the enthusiasm of contests with their fellows. But be that as it may, we are all playing the game of life. Too many are playing to the grandstand and never become players of ability. Others just toy with the game and try to remain in the company that offers attractions for them. With the winners it's different. They put everything possible into the game. They make plays count and life rewards their zeal with gain.

The Lobster's Path.

The special dispatch from New London which told of the Noank fisherman who sold 2,700 pound of lobsters for more than $300, thus enabling him to pay all the expenses incurred last spring when he started to build pots, buoys, etc., probably gives only the first chapter in an interesting story. It is fair to assume that the dealer who resold them to the summer hotel was enabled to pay the expenses he incurred when he erected his new warehouse, wharves and office buildings last fall; while, it may be presumed, the summer hotel owner in retailing them to his guests cleared off the half-million-dollar mortgage he contracted when he added the ten-story marble wing earlier in the season.—Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

NURSE FOG

"Ah," said Nurse Fog, to the Mist Grandchildren, "I am going to take a trip today and as I travel about I shall wear my great flowing shawl so that all over the places where I go there will be a good old fog!

Hiding the Tops.

"Now there is a boat taking a trip down along the coast and upon the boat are people who're going to their summer cottages nearby.

"They're going to live by the ocean and they're going to have a fine summer bathing and boating and digging in the sand.

"There is a big gray cat on the boat too. He is going away for the summer.

"He won't care for the bathing and the boating and the digging in the sand but he is planning pleasant naps in the warm summer sunshine That is what he is looking forward to more than anything else.

"But Mist Grandchildren, I must tell you what I'm doing today. I'm hiding the tops of the high buildings in the city we've just left.

"Yes, those high buildings are much too proud. They think they are so tall and so wonderful but I'm showing them that Nurse Fog is even more wonderful. I'm hiding their great tall towers with my Fog cape.

"No one could tell that the buildings were so high if they only looked at them today.

"For today I am letting the lower parts of the buildings be seen but I'm hiding the top parts. I'm hiding their great height, yes, I am!"

And Nurse Fog laughed a low, hoarse laugh.

"Old Mother Ocean is laughing at me, and as she laughs she moves about and all the boats are rolling from side to side. But Mother Ocean says if they will travel over her face as they do they can't stop her from laughing, but she must go straight ahead and laugh when she feels like it.

"That is what she is doing today.

"Of course the buoys are warning ships that I'm about. And the bells on the buoys strike with every little move old Mother Ocean makes. That is to warn ships where they are and that they must be very careful.

"Every time old Mother Ocean laughs the buoys move and the bells knock against the side of the buoys and ring their warning sounds.

"The old tug boats are going straight ahead and not paying any attention to old Mother Ocean and her laughing. They have work to do and they go ahead and do it, like the fine little workers that they are.

"They don't look very handsome but they do lots of good work and are splendid little boats.

"The boats are all blowing their whistles and their horns, and letting other boats know where they are, so none of them will bump into each other.

"They are all being very careful and not letting any accidents happen. The boats are always like that.

"But ah, Mist Grandchildren, it's your old Nurse Fog, who is making them do all this extra work.

"There are boats carrying food and others carrying coal and others carrying passengers and they all must warn each other that they are about. They wouldn't have to do so much warning if old Nurse Fog didn't happen to be about.

Here Comes the Storm King.

"The Sea-gulls don't mind us. They're flying about and having a fine time. Mr. Buff Colored Seagull is enjoying the storm, he says. He is sitting on top of one of the anchor posts and is watching the storm.

"Yes, the old Storm King is about too. And he has decided he would like to have a talk with me. He has just been sitting about from place to place on the storm, so far, hasn't been so bad.

"But he wants to have a talk with me now, and I will be glad to talk to him.

"So, Mist Grandchildren, old Nurse Fog and the Storm King will have a talk, and now Mother Ocean will laugh at our jokes, and as she laughs how she will roar and roll for she simply roars with laughter at our jokes. Here comes the Storm King now."

Yes, or Either.

Teacher (after lesson on verbs): "As we walk out on a cold winter day and look around, what do we see on every hand?"

Pupil: "Gloves!"

Happens That Way Sometimes.

The man who sat on his watch said, "I told a funny story, expecting the crowd to split," remarked the observer of Events and Things, "evidently did not strike a responsive cord."—Toledo Blade.

Stories of Great Scouts

By Elmo Scott Watson

CAPTAIN SAM BRADY AND HIS FAMOUS LEAP

Capt. Sam Brady was a member of a fighting family which made history on the Pennsylvania border during the Indian wars after the Revolution. Captain Brady's greatest exploit took place in Ohio. He had been captured by the Indians and carried to the Sandusky Towns, headquarters for all the Ohio tribes, where the savages prepared to burn him at the stake.

He was stripped, bound to a post and slow fires kindled around him, for the Indians hated him so much that they wished to torture him as long as possible. Brady was a powerful man and he strained at his fetters until they were loosened slightly. Then with a final effort he snapped the last bond, leaped across the barrier of flame and, seizing a squaw, pitched her into the fire.

Before the Indians could recover from their surprise, the scout escaped from the village and plunged into the woods, hotly pursued by hundreds of savages. Finally he came to the Cuyahoga river, near the present site of Kent in Portage county.

At this place the river flowed between steep, rocky banks, 22 feet across from side to side. The scout was trapped. There was no other place for miles up and down the river where he could ford it. The Indians were closing in on him and his only chance of escape was to try to leap across the chasm.

Brady could hear the savages yelling in the woods only a short distance away as he ran back toward them to get a good start. Then turning, he sped for the brink and putting all his failing strength into a final spurt, he sprang for the opposite cliff. His jump was a little short and he struck the bank a few feet below the edge. The Indians stopped in amazement, then as the scout scrambled up over the edge, they opened fire.

They wounded him in the leg, delaying his flight, and in a short time were on his heels again. He came to a lake and plunged in. Stooping beneath the broad pads of a water lily, he breathed through a hollow reed while the savages hunted in vain on the shores of the lake. They found his bloody trail to the water's edge and, believing that he had drowned rather than be captured again, gave up the chase.

Soon afterward Brady reached Fort Pitt in safety. He had many more thrilling adventures before his death on Christmas day, 1795, but his 22-foot leap across the Cuyahoga was the greatest feat of all.

Though you have everything you like,
and riches come to you,
You still may be unhappy, son, you'll find that this is true.
But you can fill your days with joy;
get this, it isn't malice
The way to be real happy is to like

TASTY TIDBITS.

When you have several pieces of cheese, too dry to serve in ordinary ways, grate it and to a cupful of grated cheese add one-half cupful of boiling cream; stir until the cheese is dissolved, add cayenne and paprika salt, if needed, and pour into a cream cheese jar. The cheese will be creamy and delicious and the bits will be saved for something worth while.

Cheese Salad.—Take a cream cheese or two, add thick sweet cream to soften, season with chopped chives, green pepper and nuts. Make into balls and serve on lettuce with a good boiled dressing.

Cottage cheese served plain, after it has been enriched with cream and such seasonings as are needed, served with a good boiled dressing, makes a most tasty salad.

Cheese Savory.—To one cream cheese add a tablespoonful of softened butter, one teaspoonful of chives, one-half teaspoonful of parsley, both chopped; one-third of a teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce and anchovy essence, with salt and paprika to taste. Press into a glass and serve from time to time with crackers.

Cheese Croquettes.—To three tablespoonfuls of melted butter add one-third of a cupful of flour and stir until well blended, then pour on gradually one cupful of milk. Bring to the boiling point and add the yolks of two eggs slightly beaten and diluted with two tablespoonfuls of cream and two cupfuls of mild cheese cut in small cubes. Season with three-fourths of a teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of pepper (red) and spread on a plate to cool as soon as the mixture is smooth. When cool, shape, dip in crumbs, egg and fry in deep fat.

Cheese Supper Dish.—Spread bread with butter and sprinkle with grated cheese. Arrange in layers until the required amount fills the baking dish. Pour over a pint of milk mixed with two beaten eggs, a little salt and over the top a generous sprinkling of paprika. Bake until the custard is set. Serve from the dish.

"Lis'son, Peggy—every mudder gives her kiddies KELLOGG'S because you can eat great big bowls an' they taste good-er an' they're all crispy an' dandy!"

YOU never tasted Corn Flakes so joyously flavored, so crispy-crunchy as Kellogg's

That's why big and little folks who know the difference insist upon KELLOGG'S!

The thing to do is to make comparison—Kellogg's against any other kind of corn flakes you ever ate! If it's quality, or all-the-time crispness or delicious or appetizing flavor you want—well, just wait till you eat Kellogg's!

You'll get so cheerful about Kellogg's that the day's best hours will be when it's time to sit down with the family in front of generous bowls all filled most to bursting with those big, sunny brown Corn Flakes!

Never was a better time than tomorrow morning to prove to his taste and their tastes as well as your own that KELLOGG'S Corn Flakes are about the "gladdest of all good things to eat!"

Also makers of KELLOGG'S KRUMBLES and KELLOGG'S BRAN, cooked and krumbled.

Insist upon KELLOGG'S—if you want to know how wonderfully good corn flakes can be!

FACTS FOR FANATICS.

In the letter of John Schuhle, of grape juice fame, printed in The Freeman on Thursday, was set forth one phase of the wondrous working of prohibition that receives no attention from fanatics and very little from others. The fact that, in the days when the Eighteenth Amendment was still far in the offing and there was no condition with which to combat the theory that prohibition would boom the sale of non-alcoholic drinks, Mr. Schuhle was inclined to play around with the prohibitionists, adds weight to his assertions and conclusions. On his past record, Mr. Schuhle cannot be charged with any preconceived prejudice against prohibition.

He finds now, with prohibition on the statute books—and very little of it anywhere else—that instead of increasing the grape juice business, prohibition is diminishing it; that his strictly lawful business is taxed heavily to raise money to spend on enforcing a law that produces no revenue and that is not and cannot be enforced. He finds that he must sell his lawful and heavily taxed product in competition with unlawful and untaxed products, the makers of which are not subject to any supervision as to cleanliness or quality.

Before prohibition, in competition with honestly made alcoholic drinks that were reasonably taxed and regulated, the sale of grape juice was increasing rapidly. Now "moonshine" wines, made and sold with no restraint or regulation as to purity or cleanliness and subject to no tax, are killing the grape juice business. And other business suffers as much as Mr. Schuhle's from the burden of new taxes imposed to take the place of the former taxes on alcohol.

LET LLOYD-GEORGE COME.

Lord Northcliffe was denied entertainment at the British Embassy when he visited Washington, for the reason that he is not in good standing with the present London Government. His fall from official grace is due to an editorial published in the London Times, which he controls, to the effect that neither Lloyd-George nor Lord Curzon were fit persons to represent Great Britain at the forthcoming Washington conference on limitation of armaments. "Of all statesmen in England," said the editorial, "he (Lloyd-George) probably is most distrusted. In America he is widely regarded as a man who encompassed President Wilson with his wizardry."

Just why the eminent British editor should attack the premier because he had outwitted the American President is not apparent. Certain it is that nobody in this country country thinks any the less of Mr. Lloyd-George for what he did at the peace conference. He was working in the interests of England, first, last and all the time, and every fair-minded American admires him for accomplishing what he did for his country. Of course, he "encompassed President Wilson with his wizardry," but the American complaint is directed against the former President that he permitted himself to be hoodwinked. Obsessed with his league of nations, to the exclusion of other matters directly affecting his own country's welfare, he allowed the treaty to be written pretty much as Mr. Lloyd-George wanted it.

The fact that the British premier pulled the wool over Mr. Wilson's eyes does not disqualify him in the least from representing Great Britain at the Washington conference. For it must be remembered that Mr. Wilson is no longer a factor in our public life. Neither he nor anybody selected by him will have charge of any American interests at the conference. The probabilities are that Mr. Hughes will head the representatives of the United States around the conference table. Great Britain may send her premier or any other eminent citizen to present the British view. They may practice what wizardry they please, the American people are serene in the conviction that American interests will be brilliantly championed. No spirit of "supreme sacrifice" will govern the actions of Mr. Hughes. He is animated by the doctrine of "America first" and when that has been the inspiration of American diplomacy in the past there has been no cause for regret at the outcome.

Director Forbes of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, advocates a re-examination of world war veterans with a view of speedily adjusting cases where justice has been denied through an excessive amount of red tape. He says the Bureau has suffered and is still suffering from too much "affidavitism." Colonel Forbes is doing his utmost to put more human interest into the work of his Bureau and give every claimant all he is entitled to in the shortest possible time.

President Harding showed his good sense by appointing able men to his cabinet and now he is showing continued good sense by letting them run their departments. He is an able and strong man in good health, but no one man is able enough or strong enough or in sufficient good health to handle all the problems of the government alone.

Burroughs Nature Club Notes

Copyright 1921, By HOUGHTON MIFFLIN CO.

What do you want to know about Nature Subjects? Send any questions of general interest to the Nature Notes Department of this paper. Look for answers in this column.

Can You Answer These Questions?

1. Which of a pair of small garden snakes is the male, the larger or the smaller?

2. What makes birds moult?

3. Does a turtle or tortoise have any feeling after the head is cut off? I notice they move around a great deal.

Answers in Tomorrow's Nature Notes.

Answers to Previous Questions.

1. What creatures eat potato bugs?

Several kinds of beetles attack the Colorado potato beetle, both in the egg and larval stages, as lady-bugs, soldier bugs, etc. Crows, quail, rose-breasted and cardinal grosbeaks among wild birds, feed on it, and the domestic duck and occasionally chickens eat it. Toads also prey on it.

2. What is the small bird a trifle larger than a wren, with brownish red feathers on its head, and general sparrow-like appearance? Seen on the ground, about the garden and builds its nest in bushes?

The reddish crown might indicate the ovenbird, or so-called golden crown thrush, but that bird nests on the ground. Probably a sparrow of some sort, a song sparrow or swamp sparrow perhaps, judging from crown patch. There are so many sparrows it is impossible to do more than guess, without more data.

3. I wish to know if tapping a tree for sap injures the tree or shortens its life?

Not if the tapping is done carefully and not kept up too long at one time. Maple trees tapped annually through small auger holes that feed into tubes, show no ill effects, the slight wounds quickly healing. Pine trees can be tapped economically for pitch, but the common practice with them is to gash, and allow the tree to bleed till weakened. It then quickly succumbs to high winds, insects or fires.

DR. COMPTON TO RETURN.

Trinity M. E. Church to Have Renowned Preacher in August.

The Rev. William F. Compton, D. D., served Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church of this city for more than five years. His pastorate here terminated about seventeen years ago; since which time he has served in some of the most important churches in the New York Conference. For six years he was district superintendent of the Poughkeepsie district and was one of the six ministerial delegates to the general conference of 1916, meeting at Saratoga. Dr. Compton is known as one of the best preachers in the conference and the members of Trinity Church are very much pleased that arrangements have been made with him to preach at both morning and evening services during the month of August.

For more than five years past Trinity Church has maintained regular services throughout the year, believing that there is in the community a sufficient number of people who appreciate the privilege of church attendance throughout the summer months. The result has justified all that has been done along this line. Services are held each Sunday at 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. A cordial invitation is extended to all who are not regular attendants at the church services.

Snake Fang Punctures Tire.

Another pet theory has gone in the discard with the puncture of an automobile tire by the fang of a rattlesnake. Last Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Matthews and daughter Beatrice of Deposit, Delaware county, were motoring near Ferndale, Sullivan county, when their car ran over a rattler that was stretched across the road. One wheel struck the snake's head, one fang of the snake penetrating the tire nearly an inch and a half and causing a puncture. The snake disproved the theory that a rattler's fang cannot penetrate rubber. The snake was five feet and seven inches in length and had seventeen rattles.

WHEN POLITICIANS WERE NOT AFRAID

Col. Gleason Tells Of Days When Men Drank And Debated Politics In The Open.

Personal reminiscences of Delhi by Col. Lafayette B. Gleason, who for many years was journal clerk and then clerk of the New York state assembly and for many years has been secretary of Republican state conventions, form part of the contributions to the daily editon of the Delaware Express, of Delhi, in connection with the centennial celebration of the incorporation of that village and Old Home Week which are in progress there this week. Col. Gleason is now engaged in the practice of law in New York city and says he is out of politics.

Colonel "Lafe" was born while the Civil War was being fought, so he must have been only a boy when in 1876 he first appeared in politics. He says:

"Ransom Grant was the nominee for county clerk in 1876 and invited me to accompany him on a campaign trip in the upper end of the county, which I considered a great tribute to my youthful political activities, but for the most part I held the horse while Ransom campaigned, but it was part of the education. Our first stop was Bloomville—the 18th Amendment and the Volstead Act were unknown at that time—and as we drove up a lounger on the hotel porch seized a key-bugle, stood up and sounded a few piercing notes, and patriotic citizens and voters poured in from every quarter. In a few minutes a band of strong and earnest men thronged the bar-room. Ransom invited the throng to have a cigar, and he and I turned our backs while the bartender quietly and effectively served each man a drink. I saw few cigars smoked on that trip, but I did not hear anyone invited to have anything else."

Speaking of the change in political methods, Colonel Gleason says:

"Perhaps the difference between the political warfare of the present time and in my youthful days can be illustrated by the fact that I remember having quite frequently seen Judge Charles Hathaway, one of the most dignified and handsome men I ever knew, a speaker of great force and ability, engage in a political argument on the street, generally near the bank, with Samuel Gordon, whose wit was keen as a rapier and who had no equal in the county in rough and ready debate, and in a brief time an audience of several hundred would gather, cheering and encouraging the respective speakers who would move from the sidewalk to the bank portico and vigorously continue the debate for several hours, and then like Charles McGuire's fight that lasted forty days and forty nights, 'call it a draw' and go home to resume again with fresh arguments few days later."

ON-A-JOB, OFF-A-JOB JIM!

Being a Story

Of how Jim got on a job and why he got off it again.

"Know anything about engines, Jim?" asked Molly.

"Not much. Why?"

"Got a new job for you tomorrow, if you'll try your hand at it. There's something the matter with the motor that supplies the house with water and electricity. The system was installed last year and has worked perfectly until tonight when the motor refused to budge. The water is getting low and we'll soon be forced to sit in the dark."

"That's not such a terrible prospect," laughed Jim. "However, if you care to risk it, I'll take a look at the motor tomorrow."

Together they entered the shed behind the barn, where the pumping and electrical system was installed. Jim had never seen one of the outfits before and gazed upon it with awe and doubt. "You might tell me what you know," he began. "Nothing like being started right."

Molly agreed. She showed him where the kerosene tank was, and explained how she primed the motor with gasoline to start it. Finally she offered him the book of instructions.

"Don't worry," he assured her. "In two days the motor will go."

"Not before?" she asked in consternation.

"Not a minute before."

"But look here, we've got to have water, and we've got to have power, so the motor must go."

"I warned you when I came that my jobs must last two days. What's a little water compared to three million dollars?"

"You don't mean that you lose three million dollars if you don't get a job every two days!" gasped molly. "If that's the case—well, give us power and water tonight and I promise you work on the motor tomorrow."

"It seems like stretching the point."

"Please, Jim, do what you can, and trust me for the job."

Jim consented, not sure anyway that he could make the motor go. With the book in his left hand and the monkey wrench in his right, he finally found the cause of the trouble. It was speedily mended, but with cleaning and replacing the various parts, he was able to keep working until five o'clock. That night the motor sang merrily while the tanks were filled and the generator recharged the storage batteries.

The next morning Jim entered the shed, wondering how Molly had kept her word. He discovered that after the first few explosions the motor refused to go. He primed, he changed the spark plug, he cranked, to no avail. Then, with book in hand once more he proceeded to take the motor apart. After a morning of investigation he could find nothing wrong, so he spent the afternoon putting the parts together, until it stood once more a completed motor. Again he primed, and turned over the wheel. No response.

lifting his tired back and gazing toward the setting sun. "It's no use. I'm all in. And yet, I mustn't spare another day working on this mule. What will Molly say?"

"Molly will say, 'fill the kerosene tank.' She emptied it this morning'" came the person's taunting voice from the door.

MAY RAISE TAX EXEMPTION

$2,500 For Heads Of Families Is Suggested By Some Congressmen To Further Meet Democratic Opposition To Relief Given Rich.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, Aug. 12—An increase in the income tax exemption from $2,000 to $2,500 for the heads of families was considered today by the house ways and means committee. This additional relief from tax burdens was urged by Representatives Bacharach, of New Jersey, and Green, Iowa, in addition to the increase from $200 to $400 exemption for each minor child and dependent. The latter has been approved by the committee.

It was urged that the increased exemptions were necessary to meet increased living costs of the ordinary family, and could be made without forcing a certain treasury deficit. They would meet the Democratic opposition to the tax revision which is claiming that most of the tax reductions made have been for the benefit of the rich.

This advocated change in the income law and a readjustment of income sur tax made necessary by reduction of the sur tax maximum to 32 percent previously decided, formed the major part of uncompleted work on the tax revisions bill facing the committee today. Before night it is expected that these rates will be adjusted, final decision taken on all previous action, and the bill turned over to the drafting experts for preparation for the public printer.

Administrative features of the bill have been given much consideration by the committee in an effort to simplify and clarify the language and provisions so that tax payers may be able to make out their tax returns without difficulty and any doubt. Many provisions submitted by the treasury officials have been redrafted and much of the language used has been rejected as too technical. These provisions of the bill have not been finally approved by the committee and will be gone over again today with care.

QUARRYVILLE.

Quarryville, Aug. 11.—The Ladies' Aid of the M. E. Church will hold their fair at Ziegler's Hall on Monday, August 15. A chicken supper will be served, beginning at 5:30 standard time. The ladies are working hard to make this the biggest and best fair they have ever had and deserve your patronage. A large number of useful articles will be on sale.

The Sunday school at the M. E. Church is increasing in interest and attendance. Last Sunday there were 57 present. Prof. Ford Hummel of Albany is teaching the Bible class through the month of August. Also Mr. Hummel's wife and son are conducting the music Sunday afternoons. Mr. Mott of Brooklyn, a Salvation Army officer, spoke Sunday on Consecration.

Y., where he is to be operated on for the removal of a growth, or tumor, which, according to reports has been pressing close to his brain. All information as to his health has been refused at his home, his office and at the hospital. REALLY CASE OF "LOCKJAW"

But Small Boy Was Not as Badly Off as His Fond Mother Had Begun to Fear.

Little Peter Peterson came home from school and never said a word. His mother watched him in astonishment. "What's the matter, Peter? Did you forget your lessons this morning?" she asked.

Peter didn't answer. Mrs. Peterson looked at him in dismay.

"Peter, darling," she exclaimed, "are you ill."

Peter merely shook his head.

"Good gracious! What is the matter? Speak to me!" screamed the anguished mother.

Peter tried to speak, but couldn't, and, with a shaking hand, pointed to his mouth.

The mother flew round to the doctor, and, by the scruff of the neck, brought him back to her hopeful.

The medical man examined the youngster, but with frantic struggles Peter broke away from his grasp.

"It's a most aggravating—I mean aggravated case of—" began the doctor.

But just at that moment, with one big gulp, the chunk of taffy which bald held poor Peter's teeth together worked loose, and Peter gave a glad yell of joy as he recovered the use of his mouth.

Boy Prisoner in India.

A boy who was kidnaped, ten years ago in England, has been discovered living in a cave in northern India. He speaks very little English and does not know his real name. About three and a half years ago the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Nepal, India, found a lad, who had been closely confined in a cave with a priest for many years, during which he was not allowed to associate or speak with any human being. The native priest, who was very ill and about to die, requested a representative of the society to call on him so that he might confess to a grave offense. "The boy," he declared, "who is living with me is English. About ten years back I was in England and I saw him playing in a street with other children, and I took a great fancy to him. I induced him to come with me, and brought him over here." The priest then died.

Grape Juice Profiteering.

Haley Fiske, the life insurance magnate of New York, said in a Rotary club address:

"Some young men erroneously think that up-to-date methods are always mean, sordid, crooked methods. They are like the junior partner.

"'Everybody's profiteering now,' said the senior partner in a grape juice firm. 'Shall we raise our price, cut down the size of our bottle, or adulterate our grape juice?'

"'Gee you're a back number,' the junior partner sneered. 'We'll do all three, of course. Why can't you be up-to-date?'"

Dog Mothers Kittens.

An English collie dog is mothering four six-weeks-old kittens at the home of H. H. Crissman, Upper Lockport, Pa. The foster-parent is more solicitous for the welfare of the little felines than the mother cat, which has practically deserted them. Members of the Crissman family say the dog carefully guards the kittens constantly, will permit no stranger to come near, and at times joins them in playful antics.

OBEYING ORDERS

"You know what I told you about coming into the parlor last night when George called."

"Yes, you said don't let me see you in this parlor again when George is there, an' that's why I hid under the couch."

Greediness Almost Cost Life.

A resident of Sparkhill, Eng., owns a hen that is a mouse-killer. She was found one day with a mouse in her beak, and was attempting to swallow it whole. The mouse had to be forcibly removed to prevent a tragic issue, as the hen was in danger of choking.

May Have Had a Premonition.

The rector of St. Mary's, Wanstead, Eng., preached at the morning service in his church a few weeks ago a sermon on "The End of Life," and then administered the Holy Communion. Immediately after arriving home he collapsed and died.

IN EVENING TOGS

Straight-Line Dress Still Triumphant—Greek Drapery Provides Note of Beauty.

The Greek idea is firmly established in summer evening dresses. There has been considerable talk of flaring skirts, and a number of them have made their appearance in the shops, but, as predicted, cites a fashion critic, they have proven to be only a whim of fashion, and the straight-line dress still is triumphant. It would be impossible in the entire annals of fashion to find anything more beautiful than the clothes built on the natural lines of the body.

White dresses for daytime wear may be on perfectly straight lines, some draping usually is required for models designed for the evening, and in these we are becoming more familiar with the beauty of Greek drapery at its best—that is, when the cloth was laid in natural folds.

There is no more reason why an evening frock, any more than one intended for the morning, should be fussy. Happily, the days when this was considered necessary are passed.

Nothing could be lovelier than the white and silver evening dresses created for this summer. They are very straight of line and high of neck in the front, but with the decolletage cut extremely low in the back and standing away from the body in some mysterious way, so that while the front of the neck appears to fit rather snugly the back is loose.

The dresses themselves are much like the continuously popular chemise, except that they are draped slightly to the figure at the sides. A wide sash of the white fabric, which usually is a soft silk, may girdle such a frock at a low line. From this sash fall loops of the silk the same width as the sash and lined with silver cloth, as is the girdle, which ties in the back and hangs as many inches below the skirt as desired. If the dress is intended for formal wear the ends of the sash may form square or pointed trains. Both emerald green crepe de chine and silver and bright cerise colored silk and silver have been attractively worked out in these simpler models.

MAKING THE MENDING EASY

Have Set of Pegs Conveniently Spaced on Board to Accommodate Spools and Balls.

The best possible way to keep spools of thread and mending cotton is on a set of pegs that will fit into the hole in the middle of the spool or ball. You can buy these, though the spool holders offered for sale usually have only three or four pegs. You should have at least a dozen. A good home-made device is to get a narrow, smooth board, perhaps 15 inches long and three or four inches wide. This you may make smooth by finishing it with enamel paint. In this you should drive long, heavy nails an inch and a half apart. You might drive two rows of these if your board is wide enough. Drive them just far enough in to make them secure. On these nails you can place your threads and mending cottons.

A few hours more would be sufficient time to devote to making an excellent mending paraphernalia with a convenient place for keeping mending needles, scissors, tapes, buttons and the various other essentials of mending.

FROM 'FAIRYLAND' SHE COMES

Two heavy rows of rose satin ruching are the sole adornment of this simple little summer frock from "Fairyland" of Paris. A lightweight silk of pure white makes the body of the garment.

CHARMING ENGLISH CREATION

TUB SILK FROCK IS POPULAR

Among the most charming of the warm weather frocks shown this year may be mentioned those made of soft, washable silks. These silks come in light colors, and more often than not in gingham patterns. Checks and stripes of various widths are featured, the background usually being white. The material launders beautifully and generally gives excellent service. The tendency is to fashion the tub silk frocks on somewhat tailored lines.

The regulation frock made of tub silk in the checked pattern and piped in color to match the check, or if this is a color, such as blue, green or red, a black piping may be used if preferred. The belt is of white kid trimmed in bright colored or black patent leather, and the shoes carry out the same color scheme. A little vestee, often of white knitted silk, organdie or other cotton material, is a part of the design.

Tub silk makes an ideal frock for wear at home during the summer months, as it is so soft that it does not wrinkle at all and will stand a good deal of wear without rubbing.

WAY TO LAUNDER SWEATERS

Garment Should Be Cleansed by Squeezing, Lifting Up and Down, and Not Stretched.

Free the sweater from all loose dust, then measure and write down the length and width of the front and back, length of shoulder and length of sleeves along the seam.

Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of white soap flakes in a half cupful of boiling water and stir into a gallon of warm water (for colored garments the water should be cooler than for white).

Put in the sweater and wash by squeezing and lifting up and down in the soapy water, taking care not to stretch it. Do not rub. Rinse in several waters of the same temperature as the wash water, and for white sweaters add a very little bluing to the last rinse water. Squeeze between the hands, roll in a Turkish towel and squeeze again to remove as much water as possible.

Set a table outdoors in the shade and cover it with a folded sheet. On this lay the sweater with the back next the sheet and draw the fronts together and the sleeves straight out. Verify all measurements and if necessary stretch and pin the sweater into shape. When partly dry, turn the other side up.

LACE IN BLACK AND WHITE

Panels, loops or draperies that hang below the skirt give an effect of fullness without actually widening the skirt, as they also give the appearance of greater length, although in many instances the length of the skirt has not been increased. For fashion has quite definitely decided that skirts must be lengthened, and has also made an unsuccessful struggle to widen them.

Laces lend themselves well to looped effects, although they bring us to a slightly different sort of evening dress from the simple crepe de chine things. While the lines may be similar and the draping done in much the same way, the effect cannot fail to be dissimilar, because the fabrics are so unlike.

There is a tendency to react from the dyed laces, although this does not mean that they are not used. Quantities of them still are seen, but they appear a bit garish beside the black-and-white confections or the fronts in all white by contrast of jet black lace.

Spanish blonde laces still are in frequent demand. They make pleasing semi-evening dresses for midsummer, as do most with transparent brown nets.

Mysteries Concerning Melting Pot.

Certain metals, which melt only at rather high temperatures, may be mixed with each other in certain proportions and will then melt at very low temperatures. That is how some solders are made. Tin melts at 449.6 degrees Fahrenheit, lead at 620 degrees Fahrenheit, bismuth at 514.4 degrees Fahrenheit, and cadmium at 608 degrees Fahrenheit. But if you mix eight parts of bismuth with five parts of lead and three parts of tin (by weight), the alloy will melt in boiling water (212 degrees Fahrenheit). If you mix six parts of bismuth, one part of lead, two parts of tin and two parts of cadmium, it will melt in 158 degrees Fahrenheit. And if you want any alloy that will melt at 140 degrees, you have only to mix four parts of tin, eight parts of lead, fifteen parts of bismuth and three parts of cadmium.

Indiscreet Speech.

The little shoe shop was hot and overcrowded, and the woman had to wait in line to be waited on. Just ahead of her a voluble lady was discoursing on the subject of a sensible footwear and illustrating her lecture by a small, high-heeled shoe she had picked up from the counter. "Now just look at that," she said, accusingly. "It was never made for any human foot. No more woman could dream of wearing it." And she glanced righteously at her own No. 7 commonsenses boots. "I'd like to see its owner." "You can madam, if you glance behind you. For, if you'll permit me to take the one you have, I'll get Joe to wrap up my pair." And the tiny little creature in pongee who reached for the offending pump added a bit vindictively: "I'm still sane enough to know my own when I see them."—New York Evening Sun.

Cannibals' Odd Dueling Custom.

The Dangeros, a cannibal tribe of Africa, had an odd way of settling disputes with neighboring tribes. When they wished to settle a point they sent word to the tribe with which they had dispute, and the tribe selected 20 men, the Dangeros a similar number. These constituted the "armies" that were to settle the dispute. Both "armies" then repaired to an island in the river, set their canoes adrift, completely cutting themselves off from any assistance, and went to it. They fought each other down through the trees and fought until all but one man was killed. The tribe to which this sole survivor belonged was the victor, and to it belonged all the dead on the island. The victorious tribe then carried off the dead, friend and foe alike, and feasted for eight or ten days.

Largest Animal.

Most boys have seen pictures of the huge lizard which roamed the earth millions of year ago, and is supposed to be the largest animal which ever lived. Searchers in Utah have discovered some bones of an animal which was twice the size of this great prehistoric animal. A hole 600 feet long and 50 feet deep had been dug when some one claimed the land. The government thereupon created a national dinosaur monument, comprising the locality, which will be preserved until the investigations are finished. The work is being directed by the Carnegie Institute, which discovered and assembled the skeleton of the familiar dinosaur.—Boys' Life.

South Wales Funeral Custom.

In some parts of South Wales the local burial custom is that friends and neighbors of the deceased should take turns in carrying the coffin on their shoulders to the churchyard, no matter how far away. To take part in this kindly act is regarded at once as a privilege to the bearer and as a mark of esteem for the dead and for the bereaved family. The custom is still in vogue, supposed to have arisen from the fact that until recently the residences of most Welsh parishes prevented wheeled vehicles from approaching full forms at all.—Detroit News.

Flowers Express Hope.

There are three flowers which send out the message of hope, remarks the Detroit News. One is the flowering almond and the others are the hawthorn and snowdrop. The flowering almond is a little shrub which grows from two to three feet in height and blooms in May. The color of the flower is a pinkish white. The petals are small and numerous, like the daisy or the chrysanthemum. The hawthorn is generally white, rose colored or sometimes deep crimson. It bears a small fruit with a yellow pulp. The leaf is similar to that of the oak and is cup shaped and spreads as it becomes mature. The hawthorn is often called "May" from the season of blooming in England, and it is also called whitethorn to distinguish it from the sloe, or blackthorn. The snowdrop is so called from the color of the flower. The root of the snowdrop produces two leaves and one single flower, which is bell shaped, and brings this a bell of the fairies's favorites.

Playing Life's Game.

The game of life is not unlike the struggle on the football gridiron. It has all types of players. Some play for the mere fun of exercise alone, others play for the joy of winning. Some play because others play. Some play because they have no other channel upon their time. Still others feel that their very joy in living is bound up in the right to exercise and the enthusiasm of contests with their fellows. But be that as it may, we are all playing the game of life. Too many are playing to the grandstand and never become players of ability. Others just toy with the game and try to remain in the company that offers attractions for them. With the winners it's different. They put everything possible into the game. They make plays count and life rewards their zeal with gain.

The Lobster's Path.

The special dispatch from New London which told of the Noank fishermen who sold 2,700 pounds of lobsters for more than $900, thus enabling him to pay all the expenses incurred last spring when he started to build gate, buoys, etc., probably gives only the first chapter in an interesting story. It is fair to assume that the dealer who resold them to the customer had also enabled to pay the expenses he incurred when he erected his new warehouse, wharves and other buildings last fall; while, it may be presumed, the summer hotel owner in retiring them to his private channel off the half-million-dollar mansion he constructed when he added the new story marble wing earlier in the season.—Hartford (Conn.) Courant.

The wife of Captain Kidd was terrified when he called her "My treasure." She thought he wanted to bury her.

"A woman driving her first auto acts almost as upety and haughty as a young father who is steering his own baby buggy for the first time."

For the benefit of the readers of The Freeman who are in the mountains, or at the seashore, of sojourning at the lakes, let us say that the weather here at home is fine. Gentle breezes blow through golden afternoons. At night, just now, a full moon shines upon a land of peace and plenty. The days are delightful, the evenings little short of perfect. Right now Kingston is the finest of summer resorts blessed by all the breezes of Araby. (However, if we get a chance to get away there is going to be a vacant colyum for a few weeks.)

Some folks burn their bridges behind them, and some burn theirs before them.

PESKY BED BUGS

Bedbugs lay an average of seven eggs per day. Under favorable conditions they hatch in five days of which two-thirds are females. They mature to adult size and are capable of laying in four weeks. How many bedbugs would you have in a year if you left one female or egg unmolested for one year? To rid the pesky bedbug, you can readily see how necessary it is to use a preparation that will kill the eggs as well as the live ones. P. D. Q. has been demonstrated by the leading Hospitals, Hotels and Railroad Companies that the safest and most economical way to stop future generations of bedbugs, roaches, fleas and ants is to use the new discovery "Pesky Devils" Quietus "P. D. Q."

A 35c package of P. D. Q. makes a quart, enough to kill a million bedbugs, roaches, fleas and cooties and at the same time destroy their eggs.

Impossible for them to exist when P. D. Q. is properly used. Free, patent spout in every package to get the pesky devils in the hard-to-get-at places and save the juice.

Special Hospital and Hotel size $2.50—makes five gallons of P. D. Q.—your druggist has it or can get it for you, or sent prepaid upon receipt of price by the Owl Chemical Co., Terre Haute, Ind. Success of P. D. Q. has caused imitators; genuine P. D. Q. is never peddled.

FACTS FOR FANATICS.

In the letter of John Schuhle, of grape juice fame, printed in The Freeman on Thursday, was set forth one phase of the wondrous working of prohibition that receives no attention from fanatics and very little from others. The fact that, in the days when the Eighteenth Amendment was still far in the offing and there was no condition with which to combat the theory that prohibition would boom the sale of non-alcoholic drinks, Mr. Schuhle was inclined to play around with the prohibitionists, adds weight to his assertions and conclusions. On his past record, Mr. Schuhle cannot be charged with any preconceived prejudice against prohibition.

He finds now, with prohibition on the statute books—and very little of it anywhere else—that instead of increasing the grape juice business, prohibition is diminishing it; that his strictly lawful business is taxed heavily to raise money to spend on enforcing a law that produces no revenue and that is not and cannot be enforced. He finds that he must sell his lawful and heavily taxed product in competition with unlawful and untaxed products, the makers of which are not subject to any supervision as to cleanliness or quality.

Before prohibition, in competition with honestly made alcoholic drinks that were reasonably taxed and regulated, the sale of grape juice was increasing rapidly. Now "moonshine" wines, made and sold with no restraint or regulation as to purity or cleanliness and subject to no tax, are killing the grape juice business. And other business suffers as much as Mr. Schuhle's from the burden of new taxes imposed to take the place of the former taxes on alcohol.

LET LLOYD-GEORGE COME.

Lord Northcliffe was denied entertainment at the British Embassy when he visited Washington, for the reason that he is not in good standing with the present London Government. His fall from official grace is due to an editorial published in the London Times, which he controls, to the effect that neither Lloyd-George nor Lord Curzon were fit persons to represent Great Britain at the forthcoming Washington conference on limitation of armaments. "Of all statesmen in England," said the editorial, "he (Lloyd-George) probably is most distrusted. In America he is widely regarded as a man who encompassed President Wilson with his wizardry."

Just why the eminent British editor should attack the premier because he had outwitted the American President is not apparent. Certain it is that nobody in this country country thinks any the less of Mr. Lloyd-George for what he did at the peace conference. He was working in the interests of England, first, last and all the time, and every fair-minded American admires him for accomplishing what he did for his country. Of course, he "encompassed President Wilson with his wizardry," but the American complaint is directed against the former President that he permitted himself to be hoodwinked. Obsessed with his league of nations, to the exclusion of other matters directly affecting his own country's welfare, he allowed the treaty to be written pretty much as Mr. Lloyd-George wanted it.

The fact that the British premier pulled the wool over Mr. Wilson's eyes does not disqualify him in the least from representing Great Britain at the Washington conference. For it must be remembered that Mr. Wilson is no longer a factor in our public life. Neither he nor anybody selected by him will have charge of any American interests at the conference. The probabilities are that Mr. Hughes will head the representatives of the United States around the conference table. Great Britain may send her premier or any other eminent citizen to present the British view. They may practice what wizardry they please, the American people are secure in the conviction that American interests will be brilliantly championed. No spirit of "supreme servility" will govern the actions of Mr. Hughes. He is animated by the doctrine of "America first," and when that has been the inspiration of American diplomacy in the past there has been no cause for regret at the outcome.

Director Forbes of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, advocates a re-examination of world war veterans with a view of speedily adjusting cases where justice has been denied through an excessive amount of red tape. He says the Bureau has suffered and is still suffering from too much "affidavitism." Colonel Forbes is doing his utmost to put more human interest into the work of his Bureau and give every claimant all he is entitled to in the shortest possible time.

President Harding showed his good sense by appointing able men to his cabinet and now he is showing continued good sense by letting them run their departments. He is an able and strong man in good health, but no one man is able enough or strong enough or in sufficient good health to handle all the problems of the government alone.

What do you want to know about Nature Subjects? Send any questions of general interest to the Nature Notes Department of this paper. Look for answers in this column.

Can You Answer These Questions?

1. Which of a pair of small garden snakes is the male, the larger or the smaller?
2. What makes birds moult?
3. Does a turtle or tortoise have any feeling after the head is cut off? I notice they move around a great deal.

Answers in Tomorrow's Nature Notes.

Answers to Previous Questions.

1. What creatures eat potato bugs?

Several kinds of beetles attack the Colorado potato beetle, both in the egg and larval stages, as lady-bugs, soldier bugs, etc. Crows, quail, rose-breasted and cardinal grosbeaks among wild birds, feed on it, and the domestic duck and occasionally chickens eat it. Toads also prey on it.

2. What is the small bird a trifle larger than a wren, with brownish red feathers on its head, and general sparrow-like appearance? Seen on the ground, about the garden and builds its nest in bushes?

The reddish crown might indicate the ovenbird, or so-called golden crown thrush, but that bird nests on the ground. Probably a sparrow of some sort, a song sparrow or swamp sparrow perhaps, judging from crown patch. There are so many sparrows it is impossible to do more than guess, without more data.

3. I wish to know if tapping a tree for sap injures the tree or shortens its life?

Not if the tapping is done carefully and not kept up too long at one time. Maple trees tapped annually through small auger holes that feed into tubes, show no ill effects, the slight wounds quickly healing. Pine trees can be tapped economically for pitch, but the common practice with them is to gash, and allow the tree to bleed till weakened. It then quickly succumbs to high winds, insects or fires.

DR. COMPTON TO RETURN.

Trinity M. E. Church to Have Renowned Preacher in August.

The Rev. William F. Compton, D. D., served Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church of this city for more than five years. His pastorate here terminated about seventeen years ago; since which time he has served in some of the most important churches in the New York Conference. For six years he was district superintendent of the Poughkeepsie district and was one of the six ministerial delegates to the general conference of 1916, meeting at Saratoga. Dr. Compton is known as one of the best preachers in the conference and the members of Trinity Church are very much pleased that arrangements have been made with him to preach at both morning and evening services during the month of August.

For more than five years past Trinity Church has maintained regular services throughout the year, believing that there is in the community a sufficient number of people who appreciate the privilege of church attendance throughout the summer months. The result has justified all that has been done along this line. Services are held each Sunday at 10:30 a. m. and 7:30 p. m. A cordial invitation is extended to all who are not regular attendants at the church services.

Snake Fang Punctures Tire.

Another pet theory has gone in the discard with the puncture of an automobile tire by the fang of a rattlesnake. Last Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Matthews and daughter Beatrice of Deposit, Delaware county, were motoring near Ferndale, Sullivan county, when their car ran over a rattler that was stretched across the road. One wheel struck the snake's head, one fang of the snake penetrating the tire nearly an inch and a half and causing a puncture. The snake disproved the theory that a rattler's fang cannot penetrate rubber. The snake was five feet and seven inches in length and had seventeen rattles.

WHEN POLITICIANS WERE NOT AFRAID

Col. Gleason Tells Of Days When Men Drank And Debated Politics In The Open.

Personal reminiscences of Delhi by Col Lafayette B. Gleason, who for many years was journal clerk and then clerk of the New York state assembly and for many years has been secretary of Republican state conventions, form part of the contributions to the daily editon of the Delaware Express, of Delhi, in connection with the centennial celebration of the incorporation of that village and Old Home Week which are in progress there this week. Col. Gleason is now engaged in the practice of law in New York city and says he is out of politics.

Colonel "Lafe" was born while the Civil War was being fought, so he must have been only a boy when in 1876 he first appeared in politics. He says.

"Ransom Grant was the nominee for county clerk in 1876 and invited me to accompany him on a campaign trip in the upper end of the county, which I considered a great tribute to my youthful political activities, but for the most part I held the horse while Ransom campaigned, but it was part of the education. Our first stop was Bloomville—the 18th Amendment and the Volstead Act were unknown at that time—and as we drove up a lounger on the hotel porch seized a key-bugle, stood up and sounded a few piercing notes, and patriotic citizens and voters poured in from every quarter. In a few minutes a band of strong and earnest men thronged the bar-room. Ransom invited the throng to have a cigar, and he and I turned our backs while the bartender quietly and effectively served each man a drink. I saw few cigars smoked on that trip, but I did not hear anyone invited to have anything else."

Speaking of the change in political methods, Colonel Gleason says:

"Perhaps the difference between the political warfare of the present time and in my youthful days can be illustrated by the fact that I remember having quite frequently seen Judge Charles Hathaway, one of the most dignified and handsome men I ever knew, a speaker of great force and ability, engage in a political argument on the street, generally near the bank, with Samuel Gordon, whose wit was keen as a rapier and who had no equal in the county in rough and ready debate, and in a brief time an audience of several hundred would gather, cheering and encouraging the respective speakers who would move from the sidewalk to the bank portico and vigorously continue the debate for several hours, and then like Charles McGuire's fight that lasted forty days and forty nights, 'call it a draw' and go home to resume again with fresh arguments few days later."

ON-A-JOB, OFF-A-JOB JIM!

Being a Story Of how Jim got on a job and why he got off it again.

"Know anything about engines, Jim?" asked Molly.

"Not much. Why?"

"Got a new job for you tomorrow, if you'll try your hand at it. There's something the matter with the motor that supplies the house with water and electricity. The system was installed last year and has worked perfectly until tonight when the motor refused to budge. The water is getting low and we'll soon be forced to sit in the dark."

"That's not such a terrible prospect," laughed Jim. "However, if you care to risk it, I'll take a look at the motor tomorrow."

Together they entered the shed behind the barn, where the pumping and electrical system was installed. Jim had never seen one of the outfits before and gazed upon it with awe and doubt. "You might tell me what you know," he began. "Nothing like being started right."

Molly agreed. She showed him where the kerosene tank was, and explained how she primed the motor with gasoline to start it. Finally she offered him the book of instructions.

"Don't worry," he assured her. "In two days the motor will go."

"Not before?" she asked in consternation.

"Not a minute before."

"But look here, we've got to have water, and we've got to have power, so the motor must go."

"I warned you when I came that my jobs must last two days. What's a little water compared to three million dollars?"

"You don't mean that you lose three million dollars if you don't get a job every two days!" gasped molly. "If that's the case—well, give us power and water tonight and I promise you work on the motor tomorrow."

"It seems like stretching the point."

"Please, Jim, do what you can, and trust me for the job."

Jim consented, not sure anyway that he could make the motor go. With the book in his left hand and the monkey wrench in his right, he finally found the cause of the trouble. It was speedily mended, but with cleaning and replacing the various parts, he was able to keep working until five o'clock. That night the motor sang merrily while the tanks were filled and the generator recharged the storage batteries.

The next morning Jim entered the shed, wondering how Molly had kept her word. He discovered that when the first few explosions the motor refused to go. He primed, he cleaned the spark plug, he cranked, to no avail. Then, with book in hand once more he proceeded to take the motor apart. After a morning of investigation he could find nothing wrong, so he spent the afternoon putting the parts together, until it stood once more a completed motor. Again he primed, and turned over the wheel. No response.

lifting his tired back and gazing toward the setting sun. "It's no use. I'm all in. And yet, I mustn't spare another day working on this mule. What will Molly say?"

"Molly will say, 'Fill the kerosene tank.' She emptied it this morning," came the person's taunting voice from the door.

MAKES TWO-THIRDS MORE JAM FROM SAME AMOUNT OF FRUIT, AND NEVER FAILS

The tart flavor of ripe, luscious plums is now easily preserved for Winter to serve with meats and to spread on bread, toast and biscuit. Good plum jam has always been considered an uncommon preserve because so difficult to make well.

A new and never-failing method has now been discovered with which anyone can make an excellent quality quickly and more economically. With the Certo Process full-ripe plums are used—not unripe plums so necessary by the old method. The Certo Process retains all the rich flavor of this ripe fruit because it requires only one minute's boiling—not the 20 or more minutes required by the old method, which destroyed the flavor and made it difficult to distinguish the plum. With Certo the result is a far superior fruity flavor and two-thirds more jam from the same amount of fruit, because no juice is boiled away. It also banishes all guesswork or worry as perfect results are certain.

The Certo Process for making plum jam is very simple: Measure 4 cups (2 lbs.) of sliced and crushed ripe plums (pitted if desired) into large preserving kettle and add ¼ cup of water. Bring to a boil, stirring well, cover kettle and simmer for 15 minutes. Then add 6 heaping cups (3 lbs.) of sugar and mix well. Bring to a vigorous boil, stirring constantly, and boil hard for one minute. Remove from fire and add ½ bottle (scant ½ cup) of Certo while stirring. Let stand one minute, skim and put into glasses. Makes 3¼ pints or 10 half-pound glasses of jam.

Certo is a pure fruit product—contains no gelatine or preservative. It positively saves time, fruit flavor of ripe fruit and guesswork. It makes all kinds of jams and jellies with fresh or canned fruit—some you have never made before. It is highly endorsed by all cooking experts who have used it. Every woman who tries it recommends it to her friends and says she'll never be without it. And Certo jams and jellies keep as well as any ever made. Get a bottle of Certo and a recipe book from your grocer or druggist at once. For extra free copies of Certo Book of Recipes, write Pectin Sales Co., Inc., 360 East Avenue, Rochester, N. Y.

Start the new—the sure, quick, economical way of making jams and jellies. You'll never return to the old "hit or miss" method.

If you are unable to obtain Certo at your grocer's or druggist's, please telephone Miss Jones at Number 1875 to learn where to obtain it.

TARIFF VALUES PLAN SETTLED

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, Aug. 12.—While most of the members of the senate took advantage of a week end recess and turned their attention away from legislative affairs, Republican members of the senate finance committee locked themselves up today and pounded away on the Fordney tariff bill with the announced intention of formally adopting the modified American valuation plans before nightfall.

Senator Penrose and other Republicans of the committee have already accepted the general principle of American valuations as laid down by the house. Official adoption of the provision hinges on the approval of certain elaborations made at the suggestion of customs experts of the treasury department with a view to making the terms of the bill easier to understand and to avoid litigation in enforcing the act.

The valuations clause will undoubtedly state specifically that the comparable wholesale selling price in the United States is to be the basis of levying the duty, and that, in cases where the American selling price cannot be established, the basis will be the selling price of the comparable imported articles.

The finance committee stood ready today to authorize the treasury department to put from twenty-five to fifty special agents at work gathering the data and information that will be required in the operation of the American valuations provision.

Chairman Fordney of the house ways and means committee and Congressman Longworth conferred with the finance committee relative to the passage in the senate of the bill to extend the dye embargo until November 27. This measure was passed by the house following an urgent request from President Harding.

Secretary of Commerce Hoover filed with the finance committee a printed statement of his views of the American valuations plan, of which he is said to approve. Hoover is also understood to have suggested to the committee that a limit be placed upon the profits which may be made by American manufacturers of coal tar products in event of an embargo on dyes is continued past the present emergency period.

The Grange had their usual big time at the annual lawn fete, a larger crowd than usual attending. Everything was sold with such rapidity it taxed the efforts of those in waiting, and the chairman wishes to thank all those who so ably assisted in helping and otherwise making it a success. There was some disappointment about the music, but Louis Shaw of Kingston very kindly helped out by furnishing a Victrola for the dancing. Mrs. William Legg won the watermelon.

The dance which was to have taken place on that evening had to be postponed on account of the hall being taken over by new management. From now on, for the rest of the season, these popular dances will be held every Tuesday and Friday evenings as usual. Music by Genthner's orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Kieffer and daughter, Elizabeth, are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joel Brink.

Every one interested in a good play, come out Monday night to the Grange Hall. The play presented by the Good Citizenship Club of Hurley insures an enjoyable evening to all who love good acting and especially when the girls' parts are interpreted by the boys, as in this play. It will be given for the benefit of the Lake Katrine Sunday school and the Good Citizenship Club, who are working for a moving picture machine. Everyone in the vicinity is urged to keep this date in mind. Ice cream and cake for sale at close.

GREEKS ARE WORRIED OVER KING'S "EVIL EYE"

Babe Constantine Sponsored Passes Away Soon After the Monarch Held Him.

That King Constantine of Greece is no mascot has long been the opinion of Venizelists, and now even those who welcomed him back are beginning to wonder if he was not better at a distance. Nothing but misfortunes have come to the country since he returned.

Exchange has gone down; the price of bread gone up; the Treaty of Sevres is not only suspended but threatened with rupture at the hands of Kemal Pasha; trade is bad; class after class is being called to the colors, and the dreams of a few months ago have proved to be very, very vain.

The monarch's supporters called those things the natural result of the Venizelos policy. "He sowed the wind; you are reaping the whirlwind," they said. But something has occurred to make even Venizelos' bitterest enemies unable to put the blame on him.

A newspaper man who had worked hard for Constantine before and since his restoration lately became the proud father of a boy. Anxious to flatter so useful an ally the king offered to stand godfather to the robust baby. The parents were delighted and the christening took place. A few minutes after Constantine had held him in his arms the infant died. The doctors can give no explanation, as the child had been very healthy.

The Venezelists insist that the king has the evil eye and the only way to rid Greece of its misfortunes is to send him away again.

JAPANESE WOMEN WEAR HEARTS IN THEIR HAIR

TEACHES BIBLE BY DUCKING

Mother Warned to Be Less Severe With Children.

Threats of a ducking in the river may be an effective method of compelling children to learn their Bible, but it does not meet the approval of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Agents of the society have recently induced a western Massachusetts mother to adopt more approved educational methods.

Investigators sent out in response to protests from neighbors learned that it was the woman's custom when any of the children failed to give strict attention to Bible study, to place the offender in a burlap bag, throw it over her shoulder and march down to the river bank. Dangling the bag over the cold water with threats of immersion usually brought quick acquiescence in her demand for closer perusal of the commandments and beatitudes.

The plan apparently had been in operation for some time, for several of the older children in the large family were found to be able to recite long passages of the Scriptures without hesitation.

Revival of Ancient Order in Peru.

The government of Peru, on the eve of the centenary celebration, revived the Order of the Sun. There are four classes of membership, the grand cross, grand officer, commander and officer. Admission and promotions will take place only on July 28 of each year, the national holiday of Peru. The name of this order dates back to the Inca empire, one of the oldest civilizations in the New World. Membership can be granted to Peruvians, military and civilians, who have rendered themselves worthy of distinction, and to foreigners who have made patent their interest in Peru.

His Own Music Better Than Ether.

His own music so soothes Oscar J. Kelley of South Boston that he preferred it to ether while hospital surgeons were probing for a bullet in his thigh. When the doctors started to put Kelley under the influence of the anesthetic he objected strenuously. Then he called for his harmonica, jumped upon the operating table and played gayly while the bullet was removed.

OUR THE WHOLE SECTION

Girl Availed Herself Thoroughly of Courtesy Extended to Her by Fellow Traveler.

Some of us remember the story of the camel that wanted to put his nose into the master's tent to warm a bit. Well, that camel is still alive. The other day she got on the train dressed very prettily and looked as if she were used to having half the world whenever she wished it. But she didn't get it, for all the Pullman seats were taken.

Finally a middle-aged man, noticing her discomfiture motioned to the Pullman conductor. "I have this whole section reserved," he explained, "and since this young lady only goes to Evansville she may have a seat in it."

Courtly, he rose from his seat facing the engine and indicated that she was to have it while he would ride backward. While he stood waiting for her to settle herself in it she lifted her grip, put it on the seat facing her, draped her coat beside it, also her hat, magazines, purse and a box of candy. Then she stretched herself in the choice seat, leaving not an inch of room for any other person to occupy.

For a long minute the man stood regarding the bit of space beside the hat and candy box. Then he turned on his heel and went into the smoking car to stay until the train reached Evansville.—Indianapolis News.

JOY THAT COMES BUT ONCE

Statesman Recalls Thrill of Delight That Came to Him in His Schoolboy Days.

William C. Redfield, former secretary of commerce, says that he can recall with microscopic distinctions the moment that gave him the biggest thrill of delight in his whole life. It was when he was going to school and trying to master long division.

Three or four aisles over from where he sat a boy yawned. It was not an ordinary yawn, but one of such genuine expression of feeling toward things in general that it attracted Redfield's attention.

He was fortunate in having a paper wad right at hand, ready for any emergency, and he aimed this at the boy's cavernous mouth. By one of those rare exhibitions of magnanimity on the part of an inanimate object, the wad went right square into the goal, and Redfield's joy knew no bounds. He had played the one chance in a million and won.

Encouraged by his dexterity in that instance, Redfield then tried throwing rings at knives at county fairs, but never again did he exhibit such wondrous aim.

Made Its Initial Trip 55 Years Ago Saturday.

Goeller's brass band was on the car playing tunes and Major Thomas Cornell and the directors of the railroad company and of the villages were passengers on a trip over the line which was from the car barn on Bridge street, now Washington avenue, the barn being near where the U. & D. and O. & W. tracks now cross Washington avenue, the terminus in the village of Rondout being at the Rhinecliff ferry. The first horse cars were of quite large size and beside a driver carried a conductor to notify the driver when to start and stop and collect half way fares, the passengers going through from one end of the line to the other paying their fare to Richard Van Gaasbeck at a toll gate that was on Union avenue, (now Broadway), a short distance south of Staples street.

Up to this time the bureau has held that neither tax was an allowable deduction. MAY RAISE TAX EXEMPTION

$2,500 For Heads Of Families Is Suggested By Some Congressmen To Further Meet Democratic Opposition To Relief Given Rich.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, Aug. 12—An increase in the income tax exemption from $2,000 to $2,500 for the heads of families was considered today by the house ways and means committee. This additional relief from tax burdens was urged by Representatives Bacharach, of New Jersey, and Green, Iowa, in addition to the increase from $200 to $400 exemption for each minor child and dependent. The latter has been approved by the committee.

It was urged that the increased exemptions were necessary to meet increased living costs of the ordinary family, and could be made without forcing a certain treasury deficit. They would meet the Democratic opposition to the tax revision which is claiming that most of the tax reductions made have been for the benefit of the rich.

This advocated change in the income law and a readjustment of income sur tax made necessary by reduction of the sur tax maximum to 32 percent previously decided, formed the major part of uncompleted work on the tax revisions bill facing the committee today. Before night it is expected that these rates will be adjusted, final decision taken on all previous action, and the bill turned over to the drafting experts for preparation for the public printer.

Administrative features of the bill have been given much consideration by the committee in an effort to simplify and clarify the language and provisions so that tax payers may be able to make out their tax returns without difficulty and any doubt. Many provisions submitted by the treasury officials have been redrafted and much of the language used has been rejected as too technical. These provisions of the bill have not been finally approved by the committee, and will be gone over again today with care.

REALLY CASE OF "LOCKJAW"

But Small Boy Was Not as Badly Off as His Fond Mother Had Begun to Fear.

Little Peter Peterson came home from school and never said a word. His mother watched him in astonishment. "What's the matter, Peter? Did you forget your lessons this morning?" she asked.

Peter didn't answer. Mrs. Peterson looked at him in dismay.

"Peter, darling," she exclaimed, "are you ill?"

Peter merely shook his head.

"Good gracious! What is the matter? Speak to me!" screamed the anguished mother.

Peter tried to speak, but couldn't, and, with a shaking hand, pointed to his mouth.

The mother flew round to the doctor, and, by the scruff of the neck, brought him back to her hopeful.

The medical man examined the youngster, but with frantic struggles Peter broke away from his grasp.

"It's a most aggravating—I mean aggravated case of—" began the doctor.

But just at that moment, with one big gulp, the chunk of taffy which had held poor Peter's teeth together worked loose, and Peter gave a glad roll of joy as he recovered the use of his mouth.

Boy Prisoner in India.

A boy who was kidnaped ten years ago in England, has been discovered living in a cave in northern India. He speaks very little English and does not know his real name. About three and a half years ago the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Nepal, India, found a lad, who had been closely confined in a cave with a priest for many years, during which he was not allowed to associate or speak with any human being. The native priest, who was very ill and about to die, requested a representative of the society to call on him so that he might confess to a grave offense. "The boy," he declared, "who is living with me is English. About ten years back I was in England and I saw him playing in a street with other children, and I took a great fancy to him. I induced him to come with me, and brought him over here." The priest then died.

Grape Juice Profiteering.

Haley Fiske, the life insurance magnate of New York, said in a Rotary club address:

"Some young men erroneously think that up-to-date methods are always mean, sordid, crooked methods. They are like the junior partner.

"'Everybody's profiteering now,' said the senior partner in a grape juice firm. 'Shall we raise our price, cut down the size of our bottle, or adulterate our grape juice?'

"'Gee, you're a back number,' the junior partner sneered. 'We'll do all three, of course. Why can't you be up-to-date?'"

Dog Mothers Kittens.

An English collie dog is mothering four six-weeks-old kittens at the home of H. H. Crissman, Upper Lockport, Pa. The foster-parent is more solicitous for the welfare of the little felines than the mother cat, which has practically deserted them. Members of the Crissman family say the dog carefully guards the kittens constantly, will permit no stranger to come near, and at times joins them in playful antics.

OBEYING ORDERS

"You know what I told you about coming into the parlor last night when George called."

"Yes, you said don't let me see you in this parlor again when George is here, an' that's why I hid under the couch."

Greediness Almost Cost Life.

A resident of Sparkhill, Eng., owns a hen that is a mouse-killer. She was found one day with a mouse in her beak, and was attempting to swallow it whole. The mouse had to be forcibly removed to prevent a tragic issue, as the hen was in danger of choking.

May Have Had a Premonition.

The rector of St. Mary's, Wanstead, Essex, preached at the morning service in his church a few weeks ago a sermon on "The End of Life," and then administered the Holy Communion. Immediately after arriving home he collapsed and died.

Secret Held by Chinese.

A well-kept secret is guarded by the Chinese. Rice ink is made from burnt cereals. The Chinese who hold the secret of the process will not reveal it.

You'll Be Sorry.

"Some of these days," says a Georgia philosopher, "you'll see things so clearly that you'll wish you were back where you're located now, and you won't have a return ticket."—Atlanta Constitution.

ANXIOUS MOMENT FOR DADDY

Physician's Halting Speech Made Him Fear the Worst, at Least for a Little While.

A certain physician almost invariably stutters when under the stress of excitement. Some time ago he had occasion to officiate on an important occasion, and his vocal infirmity was the cause of a funny misapprehension.

The husband and prospective father—who, by the way, had set his heart on a son and heir—was pacing the library when his doctor entered.

"Well, doctor," cried the husband, forcing a smile, "is it twins?"

"Tr-tr-tr—" began the doctor.

"Triplets! Great Caesar!"

"Qu-qu-qu—" stammered the doctor.

"Quadruplets! Holy smoke!"

"No, no," cried the doctor. "Qu-qu-quite the contrary. Tr-tr-try and ta-take it ph-philosophically. It's a girl."

Remarkable Disappearance.

Perhaps the most remarkable disappearance in modern times of a prominent public man was that of James Winstanley, a brilliant Oxford scholar, who won the "Hertford" nearly seventy years ago. Winstanley, having become a positivist under the influence of Congreve—one of the founders of the new religion consisting of "three persons and no God"—left Oxford and lived in retirement on his Leicestershire estate, where he devoted himself to the welfare of his dependents, built a church, and, in the year of his disappearance, was high sheriff. Just before the assizes he went to Folkestone, started for the pier to meet his mother coming from Boulogne, and was never afterward seen by his friends. A boatman at Coblenz stated that an Englishman resembling Winstanley was ferried over to Ehrenbreitstein, and he was supposed to have been drowned; but those who best know his temperament thought it possible that he had immured himself in a monastery.

China's Concrete Work.

Owing to the high cost of timber in China, it has been found economical to make railway sleepers and electric transmission line poles of reinforced concrete. The sleepers are reinforced with old mine cable, states Engineering News-Record, and are cured under water before use. New track is not supplied with concrete sleepers, but laid with ordinary wooden sleepers, which are afterward replaced by concrete when the road bed is well settled. The poles are 40 feet and 50 feet high, and are cast horizontally. They are hollow for four-fifths of their length, square section, and taper, and some of the reinforcing rods are carried above and below the pole to act as lightning conductors. In both cases the concrete mix is 1:2:4, and the poles and sleepers have given complete satisfaction.—Scientific American.

Hen Drives Mother From Kittens.

Three kittens which were deserted by their mother were adopted by a hen, says a Nova Scotia reader. The hen discovered the kittens in a cow's manger and after watching them for some time sat on them. She was chased away and the mother cat was put with its young, but the old hen went back and chased the cat and claimed the kittens. How the kittens were fed is not known.

DOING FINE

"How's that pretty conductorette making out? Can she make 'em step lively?"

"Rather. They begin to step lively the minute they spy her."

Died While Chloroforming Cat.

A Pennsylvania railroad engineer lost his life when he attempted to chloroform a pet cat at his home in Paoli, Pa., while his family was away. The cat scratched and struggled as he tried to hold the chloroformed rag to its nose. He fell unconscious and died from the fumes. The cat ran away.

Special Carriage for Quadruplets.

A furniture store in New Haven, Conn., announces that it is having a special quadruplet baby carriage made in Leominster that will shortly be presented to the quadruplets that have recently been born to Mr. and Mrs. Zalso of New Haven.

Prolific Ewe.

A man in Nova Scotia reports that a ewe owned by his neighbor gave birth to a lamb; two weeks later the same ewe gave birth to twins. The first lamb died shortly after birth, but the twins are still alive and progressing.

SAID THE CAPTAIN.

"You never can tell," said the Captain,
"What a bloomin. Frenchy'll do!
Colonials fight like hell for the right
(The same as I and you),
And a Tommy is always grouchy,
And a Kiltie is always blue;
But nobody knows of the wind that blows,
Or the bird they call poilu!

"There's a Christ at every crossroads
In France," the Captain said;
"Battered and shattered by shrapnel,
Minus an arm or head.
There's a Christ or a Virgin Mary
Painted in blue and red;
They gave godspeed to the living,
And they give good sleep to the dead!

"We always saluted a wayside shrine,
When the company passed it by;
And once, on the eve of battle,
While the gun-glare lit the sky,
And the shells were singing over,
We came to a cross nailed high—
And a Christ with a poilu's helmet
Cocked rakishly over an eye!

"I've never been overly pious,
But I wheeled my horse right there,
And rode to the cross, and, standing
In my stirrups, reached in air,
When a voice in the column shouted:
'Oh, Captain! Leave it there!'
'Twas a lad climbed up and left his own,
For the Savior's head was bare!'

"We charged from the front line trenches
At dawn," the Captain said,
"And I woke, when night had fallen,
In a little white hospital bed.
On the cot next to mine was moaning
A boy with a bandaged head
He cried to his mother and Jesus Christ,
In French—and then was dead!

"'Twas the lad who gave his helmet
(And his life—as each man knew!)
To shield the head of the Savior,
Painted in red and blue.
He had laughed at the sleet of shrapnel
As he laughed at the hat askew!—
So you never can tell," said the Captain,
"What a Frenchman's apt to do!"

MADE FROM DISCARDED TIRE

Swing That Will Be Decidedly Popular With the Younger Members of the Family.

We all remember the swing hung from a gnarled apple-tree out on the farm where we spent our earliest summers. A modern equivalent of the old-time swing is made from an old discarded automobile tire provided it is not in too bad a condition.

early experiences and the young rider can cling comfortably to the rounded sides.

Suspending the tire from a single rope permits of a variety of gymnastics the rotating motion being very popular with the small boy and girl.—Leon Adelman in Popular Science Monthly.

Too Much for Him.

Little Willie, after flattening his nose against the outside of the baker's window for about half an hour, at last entered with his mind evidently made up.

"I want to know," he said in a determined yet hopeful voice, "how much those wedding cakes are?"

"Well," answered the enterprising proprietor, "I have them at all prices. Tell your mother that I can do it a beauty for $20. The cheapest is $10."

Willie sighed.

Dog Has Fun With Rooster.

A farm collie dog in western Ontario has a novel antagonist; the dog seizes the farm rooster by the neck, holding the bird's head to the ground, never inflicting an injury. The wrath of the bird on being released is unbounded. On being again attacked the dog slyly secures the neck-hold after some playful sparring. The conflict is heralded by much noise from the angry bird and the amused dog.

Chicken Raised With Kittens.

A cat with three kittens, in Nova Scotia, adopted a motherless chicken two weeks old. It would lie down with the kittens and cat and go to sleep. It would try to eat like the kittens and the cat and kittens tried to play with her. She stayed with the cat except nights until she was old enough to go with the other fowl.

Coincidence in Births.

Two sisters residing in Helen's Mills, Elk county, Pa., each became the mother of twins on the same day, all four of the newcomers being boys. The two marriages occurred only a short time apart last year. Both mothers and the twins are in excellent condition.

Unfortunate Farmers.

Most Intelligent Animal.

Scientists say that the chimpanzee is superior to any other animal except man. Next in order comes the gorilla, then the orang-outang. The gibbon, still another variety of ape, comes fourth.

Caruso of China.

Lou Hoong-Shen, the Caruso of China, is dead. You never heard of him? Yet, he died in a Shanghai theater that had contracted to pay him $10,000 a week. That's a big salary. It is phenomenally big in China, where a few cents a day will hire a strong man. Born of poor parents, Lou Hoong-Shen had to scramble for a living. But, though China is a land of musical voices (as anyone will testify who has listened to the songs of the hawker and the coolie), the boy Lou stood alone. He had the most wonderful voice among 400,000,000 Chinese. Despite this, he had to work hard before he became great. For many years he was a mummer—a Chinese actor. Ten years ago he was "discovered" in Shanghai. At once he quit the paint and weird garb of a Chinese actor and became a musical star. By odd coincidence, the great Chinese tenor died from a burst blood vessel in his throat, similar to that which threatened to take the life of Caruso, now convalescent.

Ferryboat Pavilion.

As a fitting complement to a swimming pool built on a Connecticut estate recently, a ferryboat pavilion has been erected, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. This boat has all the fittings of a regular craft of its type, being equipped above with a lifeboat, life preservers, funnel and pilot house. The cabin is a spacious dance floor, where diversion from the swimming sport may be indulged in. The swimming pool forms a forward deck for the ferry, and is surrounded by a sidewalk set with benches and chairs.

Here is a daring stunt of a man jumping from the roof of a dwelling house after being pursued by villains bent on having his life. The picture shows the pursued, just after he had made the leap from the roof, reaching out with his unbrella for the convenient telegraph wire along which he later made his way. It all happened in Berlin, where they are filming a series of detective stories, in which the man in the photograph is the hero. Even Douglas Fairbanks would think before deavering to do a jump like this.

LOWTHER DIED OF APOPLEXY

Autopsy on Body of West Shore Conductor Shows Death Came From Natural Causes—Funeral Private.

The body of George Lowther, who so mysteriously disappeared at Ravena last Monday after he had taken the West Shore way freight from this city to Ravena, was found in the woods about a mile from the railroad Thursday morning by two boys who with a dog were searching the nearby woods. Since Mr. Lowther disappeared and failed to show up Tuesday to bring his train back to Kingston a number of residents have been assisting the county authorities and state troopers in searching the woods in the vicinity. The belief that Mr. Lowther met with foul play was given up Thursday when an autopsy was performed and it was established that Mr. Lowther had died of apoplexy.

Mr. Lowther evidently after leaving the barber shop at Ravena where he was last seen alive by John Reidy, a West Shore engineer, had gone to the woods in search of berries as he said he was going to do and while there was taken ill and being unable to summon assistance died.

When Mr. Lowther failed to show up for the run back to Kingston it was feared that he had met with foul play and the body hidden in the woods. When the body was found Thursday morning there were rumors circulated about Ravena to the effect that there was a bullet hole in the head. This was denied by the Albany county authorities and coroner and at the autopsy it was learned that Mr. Lowther died from natural causes.

Coroner W. N. Conner went to Ravena Thursday night and brought the body to Kingston. The funeral, which will be private, will be held from the late residence, No. 482 Hasbrouck avenue, on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Interment will be in Mountain View cemetery, Saugerties.

DEMOCRATS MAKE DESIGNATIONS

Roscoe Irwin and Judge Schirick Address Crowded Court Room and Ward Committeemen's Suggestions Are Adopted.

Democrats from the various wards of this city met at the city court room, city hall, Thursday evening, it being an adjourned meeting to talk over the selection of candidates for nomination for supervisors and aldermen to be voted for on primary day to be held in September. The court room was full and quite a number stood in the corridor by the doors leading to the room. Reports were submitted by the ward committeemen suggesting the names whom the Democrats of wards had selected as possible to be nominated in September and elected in November. The selections were:

First Ward—No report.

Second Ward—Morton Lown, supervisor; J. Philip Beichert, alderman.

Fourth Ward—Patrick F. McDermott, supervisor; John F. Long, Jr., alderman.

Fifth Ward—John M. Rafferty, supervisor; John J. Kelly, alderman.

Sixth Ward—Charles H. Partlan, supervisor; William Joy, alderman.

Seventh Ward—No report.

Eighth Ward—Hugh F. McTague, supervisor; Peter A. Kullman, alderman.

Thirteenth Ward—John T. Egan, supervisor; Edward J. Ryan, alderman.

Former Mayor Roscoe Irwin presided at the meeting and addressed the Democrats present and City Judge Harry Schirick, who has been designated for renomination, and Thomas F. Coughlin, the Democratic designation for alderman-at-large, made speeches and aroused the faithful present to enthusiasm.

After those at the meeting who had a vote and are enrolled Democrats had signed the designation certificates an adjournment was taken until August 18.

Hurt Avoiding Hitting Boy.

H. Haner of Cauterskill was severely injured Tuesday night when he avoided hitting a boy while driving in the Spooky Hollow road near Catskill. As Haner came round a bend the boy stepped off from the running board of a car upon which he was standing and into the middle of the road. Haner turned the car sharply toward the ditch with the result that the machine was overturned and Haner pinned beneath it. He was rescued and taken to the office of Dr. L. B. Honeyford, where his injuries were treated.

The Strange Adventures of Christopher Poe

By ROBERT CARLTON BROWN

(Copyright, 1915, by W. G. Chapman.)

THE MISSPELLED WORD

"Well, hello, Poe! Glad to see you back from the wilds of New Orleans and Mexico," greeted Mitchell, President of the Bankers' Protective Association, as Poe stepped into his private room, unannounced, the second day after his return from Mexico.

"I was just on the point of calling you up," continued Mitchell.

"Saved you a nickel, then," drawled Christopher Poe, dropping into a chair, and beginning to fan himself slowly with his hat. "What's new? You look as though you'd just sidestepped a bomb."

"Something interesting," Mitchell announced, glancing uneasily at the door, a trifle open. Rising abruptly, he stepped over, and shut it securely. Coming back, he reached out mechanically, as though he had made the same motion a hundred times that day, and drew from a pigeon-hole a handful of crisp five-dollar bills, thrusting them into Poe's fingers with nervous quickness.

"Is this hush money, or a donation to the head office boy of the Bankers' Protective, which capacity I so humbly fill?" asked Poe, lifting a highly arched eyebrow, and holding it quivering for a questioning moment.

"Look it over," said Mitchell, turning sidewise, and drumming nervously on a magnifying-glass he had dropped at Poe's entrance.

Christopher Poe separated one of the bills from the package, held it first to the light, started slightly, and then quickly turned the bill face up, and smoothed it over his knee, bending close to examine it. Quick as thought he snatched the magnifying-lens from Mitchell's fingers, and studied the bill for a full minute. Then he looked up and smiled.

"Why, it's at least a millimeter out. Nobody's ever been able to get old General Jackson's jaw just right, except the man who made the genuine plate. It's been tried often, hasn't it?"

"There are two other counterfeits of that bill," answered Mitchell. "Neither of them any good at all. But this is different. They found out the bill was bad by that lengthy jaw. But that bill's been slipping through several banks for a week or more. Think of it! Just discovered today. Good-looking bill, isn't it? Paper fine, print has the proper snap; everything right but that jaw; it's just a hair less than a millimeter too long, as you noticed. I knew it wouldn't escape you."

"How much of the stuff is out?"

"Nearly twenty thousand is in!" cried Mitchell. "It's a fine mess! God knows how much is out! Think of it! Think of New York banks being fooled on bunches of this stuff; they've taken in twenty thousand dollars, and the roll you have there contains samples of it all."

"But it's the best paper I've ever seen!" exclaimed Christopher Poe, slightly flushed, having turned again to the bill. "The counterfeiter hasn't missed on a thing but that jaw, and how any man could duplicate that is more than I can tell. President Jackson's jaw was a lucky thought on that '67 note; nobody could ever copy his head exactly as it's reproduced on the bill. It's a lantern jaw, so shaped that it can stand the extra millimeter and escape notice. But that paper is what worries me. It looks just like the real thing. That fellow must have got hold of a batch of the real stuff somewhere. Measurements are exactly right. The two scatter-silk lines running through the bill are correct. By George, here's a mystery worth a man's trouble!"

Poe turned the certificate over.

"Remarkable!" he exclaimed, having examined the green and white webbing, put on with the effect of fan-tracery in the cathedrals, in intricate design, difficult to imitate.

"There's nothing else out of proportion but Jackson's jaw?" queried Christopher Poe, glancing at the fine printing on the green back of the note, which begins: "This note is a legal tender at its face value—"

"No, they didn't report anything else, and I haven't found a thing."

Poe paid no attention to the reply; he seemed deeply interested in the printing, reading it carefully through the magnifier. Suddenly, right at the end, he stopped, and looked at Mitchell quizzically.

Handing Mitchell the bill and pointing to the printing, he queried:

"Have you read this?"

"No, I dare say that's all right. The fellow wouldn't likely be such a shrewd engraver and make any mistake on the plain printing."

"Suppose you read it, then." Poe handed him the bill and picked up another, holding it far from his eyes, and staring at it absently.

Meanwhile Mitchell read the following usual form, printed on the back of the 1907 five-dollar note:

"This note is a Legal tender at its face value for all debts public and private, except duties on Imports and Interest on the Public Debt. Counterfeiting or altering this note or passing any Counterfeit or alteration of it, or having in possession any false or counterfeit plate or impression of it, or any paper made in imitation of the Paper on which it is printed is Felony, and is punishable by Five Thousand ($5,000) Dollars FINE, or Fifteen (15) years imprisonment at Hard Labour or both."

"Well?" he said, looking up.

"You wouldn't amount to much in working out one of these advertising puzzles where they offer a prize for finding the misspelled word," replied Poe.

"There was something near the last," reflected Mitchell. "Some word seemed out of its regular appearance."

"Read it again," suggested Poe.

"Oh, I see!" cried the other, having glanced through the last line once more. "It's the word 'labour;' that should be spelled 'labor.'"

"That's what Webster says."

"It's not one of the usual ways of detecting a counterfeit. I wouldn't ever think of reading the printing on a bill."

"The little things count."

"But surely you can't see any clue in that misspelling?"

"I certainly have an inkling to the counterfeiter from it," was the abrupt reply, as Poe rapidly thumbed through the stack of five-dollar bills, looking first at one side and then the other, and paying no attention to Mitchell's importunate questions.

Finally he folded the roll carefully and placed it in his breast-pocket.

"I'll take these with me, if you don't need them," he said. "Tell me, where have those things been passed?"

"Mostly around New York. It's funny, the counterfeiting band doesn't seem to have many agents outside, most of it has cropped out in Brooklyn, but then, this is the first batch, and I suppose we'll soon be getting others from the interior states."

Poe secured a list of the banks that had been caught on the bills and departed.

He went at once to his rooms, where he spent several hours closely examing each bill. Finally he separated one from the lot, the only one which showed a slight difference from the others. This he put beneath the magnifying-glass, and studied it at great length. Only one portion of the bill interested him; it was the white spot on the back, at the left, balancing the frame which contained the printed notice with "labor" misspelled.

On that blank spot was the light impression of a finger. Poe bent close over it, and followed the light ridges which had left their impressions. Evidently he was classifying the kind of mark it was, in accordance with the system of finger-print identification. He studied away, mumbling quick phrases to himself, according to a habit he could not break:

"First finger, right hand. Loops approx. tented arches—eleven ridges—ulnar—outer terminus—accidentals. Callus—engraver—graver. Hmmmm—curious—twins—needles, no! —ah! East India. Fakir. Paper. I—"

Christopher Poe dropped the magnifier, and swung around to the telephone at his elbow. In a minute's time he was connected with Mitchell.

"How about the Coney Island bank?" he asked. "How much of the queer was shoved off there?"

"They took in seven thousand of it, nearly. Got in heaviest there. Doesn't seem possible, but it's the cleverest counterfeit ever made."

"And the Brooklyn National?"

"Stuck for nearly five thousand."

"Good!" Poe started to hang up when Mitchell's voice broke in anxiously:

"I hope you're not trusting entirely to that misspelled word? I don't see anything in that."

"No. I've got a finger-print to work on now. Just discovered it on one of the notes."

"Is that so?" the voice became anxious. "Suppose I run over and have a look at it."

"Better hurry, then," replied Poe. "It's after three now, and I've got to get out to Coney before supper." He paused, started to hang up, and then called, "Bring Burns with you."

The pair of bankers arrived shortly, and Poe showed them the finger-prints he had discovered. Both looked at it carefully, but neither believed that it was an important discovery.

"Why," insisted Mitchell, "that finger print could have been left by any of a hundred people who might have handled the bill."

"Then how on earth are you going to find the man? It's impossible. You say he can't be an old crook, and his work certainly isn't that of any one I recognize. You aren't going to look at everybody's fingers until you find the one that matches this, are you?" queried Burns.

"Hardly that," smiled Poe. "Since you fellows are so skeptical, I won't trouble to tell you my theory at all. But, Burns, suppose you run over to Coney Island with me this afternoon. We may bump into something interesting."

"All right." Burns shrugged his shoulders doubtfully. "You dope things out pretty well, Chris, but I haven't much faith in your clue this time. It leaves too much to chance."

Burns and Poe started in a taxi for Coney Island at once, leaving Mitchell behind.

Arrived at the famous resort, the taxi dodged in and out among the crowding vehicles, and finally came to a quivering halt before the central police station. Leaving Burns outside, Poe hurried in, and was at once admitted to the Captain of the district, under the name of Hardy. By showing credentials from the Bankers Protective Association Poe gained the Captain's interest, and quickly explained about the counterfeit five-dollar bills.

"We've had several complaints of them the last few days," answered the Captain. "They've been in circulation a couple of weeks, I guess, but nobody detected them till the banks finally got wise. Best counterfeit I ever saw. Frankly, I can't tell them from the genuine, except when somebody points out the fact that the jaw on the portrait of Jackson is a bit too long."

Poe plunged at once into the purpose of his visit.

"Will you kindly give me what records you have of East Indian jugglers in shows here, preferably those managed by Englishmen?"

The Captain turned to a directory and skimmed through it.

"There's lots of East Indian troupes this year," he said. "Here are some addresses. But you don't suspect those fellows, do you?"

"Not exactly," was the reply, as Poe rapidly copied down the names and addresses. Many occupations were included in the list; some were jugglers, others fortune-tellers, dancers, dervishes, snake-charmers, and magicians. The whole list was quite long and the Captain could offer but little information concerning the management of the Indian performers.

Thanking the officer for his courtesy, Poe left at once, pulled Burns into the vestibule of the building, tore the list of names in half, and asked:

"Have you much money with you?"

"About fifty dollars, I guess," answered Burns, feeling of his wallet.

"Well, here's a hundred in tens. I brought an extra amount. Take it, and go to all the shows at these addresses; pay in tens, and keep separate all the five-dollar bills you get in change. Ask at each place who the manager is, have it understood that you want to hire some jugglers for a show. If you stumble onto any bunch of East Indians with an English manager, take his name and address. Then meet me here at exactly nine o'clock."

"All right," answered Burns blankly, but he was too well acquainted with Poe's methods to ask useless questions.

Poe only smiled, sat tight, and waited.

Poe began at once his circuit of the shows employing East Indians. He paid everywhere with a ten or twenty-dollar bill, and always stuffed the notes he received in change into a separate pocket, without more than glancing at them. At each show he inquired the name of the manager, and secured several addresses.

Finally, having found nothing of immediate interest, and it being almost time to rejoin Burns, he slipped back to the police-station, and, picking out a vacant corner in the vestibule, turned his back to the door, rapidly thumbing over the collection of bills he had received in change. There were nine five-dollar bills in the lot. To his great satisfaction, on examining President Jackson's jaw on each he found that six were identical with the counterfeit bills he had studied all afternoon.

Burns came shortly, with six five-dollar bills, received in change at East India shows; two of them were counterfeits.

Christopher Poe put the false money away carefully and stood for a moment, thoughtfully running his thin hand through his damp brown hair; the corners of his mouth twitched, and two deep wrinkles appeared, joining the lips to the nostrils in heavy furrows.

"How many managers did you un earth?" he asked Burns abruptly.

"Only two," was the reply.

Poe took the names and addresses, compared them quickly with the several he had procured, and then, his eyes lighting up strangely, remarked:

"You stay here; if I'm not back in one hour, get the Police Captain to give you eight officers and come at once to these two addresses. It's evident the bad money is emanating from these East Indians. I want to talk it over alone with their managers. Send four of the policemen to this first address on Surf Avenue, and you come along to the Coney Island Bowery yourself with the other four. If entrance is denied at either address, force is to be used."

Without a word Poe darted out of the building, and threw himself into the tangle of merry-makers in the street. It was a gay night at Coney, and with difficulty Poe made speed to the address on Surf Avenue.

There he found a roomy lodging above a moving-picture show, and asked for the proprietor, one of the two managers of East India shows he had picked out to call upon.

He received information that the man was not in and wouldn't be until the next day. Somewhat disappointed, Poe walked slowly down the steps and stood for a moment in the curb.

Then he glanced at the card. The other name and address was:

EDGEWORTH HORTON,
75 BOWERY.

Deep, cynical wrinkles between nose and mouth formed unconsciously; he drew his broad-brimmed straw hat close over his eyes, and turned quickly into the Bowery.

At number 75 Christopher Poe found a big gay music-hall, with the stereotyped dancing and singing girls. On the lurid bill in front was a huge advertisement:

SPECIAL
NAUTCH DANCERS
JUGGLERS
SNAKE-CHARMERS

As he came to "Snake-Charmers" on the list, the banker-detective's eyebrows shot up in sudden interest; then he walked into the cafe, and seated himself at a table. It was a large, substantial place, doing a tremendous business, and Poe took in all the details carefully, noting the height of the ceiling and the two passages upstairs, one on either side.

Having taken a sip of the tasteless beer placed before him, Poe slipped from his chair, and walked through one of the side doors, ascending a narrow flight of stairs.

At the top was a big door, closed. Poe stepped up and knocked on it. A full minute he waited, vaguely conscious of the fact that unseen eyes were peering at him from somewhere near by.

Suddenly the door swung open noiselessly, and an East Indian servant, dressed severely in black silk, bowed to him with a funereal grin.

"I should like to see Mr. Horton," said Poe in a hurried, business-like tone. "I'm from Atlantic City, you know. Tell him Mr. Hardy. I've got two new places over there, and I'd like to get hold of a good troupe of East Indians."

The servant bowed, took the proffered card, bowed again, and abruptly slammed the door in Poe's face.

"Cool one!" exclaimed the banker. "Wonder where he was watching me from before he opened the door. He certainly's got some look-out hole. Didn't look at me curiously, must have been watching me."

Two minutes elapsed; the door slid open, and the East Indian bowed him to enter.

It was a strangely cool and restful apartment, seemingly far removed from screeching, sweaty Coney, though below was a riotous music hall, and there was a break-neck toboggan with shrieking joy-riders just across the street.

Poe noted with interest the thickness of that front door. It was at least eight inches, doubtless to make it sound-proof.

Having been guided through a pleasant little reception room with several heavy chairs and a deep-napped carpet, Poe was ushered into a large square room, quite plain; a representative office of busy America.

A gray-haired, thin-faced man of indeterminate age sat in a large square chair before a roll-top desk. He was alone, and looked up with a quick, engaging smile as Poe entered.

"Mr. Hardy?" he said interrogatively, with an English intonation. "So glad to see you. Beastly hot tonight, isn't it? I'd die if it weren't for the electric fans."

"You've got a fine place here," answered Christopher Poe, assuming the rough good-fellowship of the American show-manager. "It's as cool as beer and as quiet as Rajputana."

"Oh, you've been to India then—and the desert?" queried Horton, motioning Poe to a chair, and drawing up his interestedly, as he dismissed the servant with a nod.

"Only once, thank goodness, and you'll never get me there again," answered Poe, after the well-nigh inimitable manner of your typical American business man who abhors a vacation and loathes a change of scene, be it outside of his own country. "First time I made a big stake, took my wife. She liked it. Well, it wasn't so bad. Gave me lots of good ideas for shows."

"Born fakirs—the natives—aren't they?" smiled the Englishman easily, it being quite evident from his manner that he was sure of his visitor, and had sized him up for just what Poe chose to be considered.

"They're the best in the business," answered Poe enthusiastically. "I came all the way from Atlantic City to look up a troupe, and it's been an awfully hot day. Haven't you got a few to spare—a juggler or a snake-charmer?"

"Oh, I might spare one or two. I've quite a number of them, but I could only lease them to you; might need them next season, you know."

"Oh, certainly, I understand that. They don't care who they work for, I guess," replied Poe in the same brusque manner. "I've got a friend in the British Government service in Calcutta. He says you've got to treat the natives as though they were dogs. He has a bunch of them working for him, running printing-presses or something; says they're all right if you knock 'em down once a day."

"Indeed," smiled Horton, "that's about right. But I'm interested. I have friends in the government employ over there. Perhaps I know this chap you speak of; you say he's in the British engraving department?"

"Printing or something like that," answered Poe. "His name is Gerver. Hasn't been there long."

"Gerver, Gerver," repeated the other, "no, can't say I've heard of him. Perhaps he's—"

"Got bit by a cobra once, had the wound cauterized—"

Christopher Poe broke off abruptly in his interruption as Horton stirred in his chair and gave him a strange look, at the same time the forefinger of his right hand twitched and crooked up convulsively.

"What's the matter? One bite you too?" queried Poe, calling attention to the other's uneasiness.

"No—yes," said Horton, confused. Then he smiled quickly, as though reassuring himself, shoved his right forefinger beneath Poe's gaze and cried: "Look! There's where one got me. I'll never forget it." Two small white scars showed on the finger, close together, sunk like pock-marks beneath heavy callouses. The grooves in the lower part of Poe's face showed deep for a moment; he took the finger, and examined the scars carefully.

"So that's the sign the cobra's fangs leave!" he exclaimed. "How'd you get out of it alive?"

"Oh, he was a tame one, belonging to one of my snake-charmers. Had had his poison sacks removed. But it threw a bally scare into me all the same."

"Funny thing!" exclaimed Poe, jerking a card from his vest-pocket, and pressing the scarred finger on the prepared surface before Horton half realized what was going on. In an instant Poe had returned the paper bearing the finger-print and drawn out the five-dollar bill he had separated from the original lot of counterfeits, holding it so that Horton could plainly see the finger-mark upon it, which had first attracted Poe's attention.

"Funny thing!" continued Poe, as Horton stared at him blankly, jerking away his finger and reaching for a rear pocket. "You must have fingered this bill. Here's a mark exactly like yours, scars the same; callous from handling the graver and all. I suppose—"

Horton had leaped to his feet and was glaring at Christopher Poe, eyes starting horridly. Poe only smiled, sat tight, and waited.

"You—you—" Horton endeavored to control himself. Then he pounced like an animal toward his desk, touched a button beneath it, and swung back, stopping with a throttled cry, a revolver half drawn from his hip-pocket.

"Wait!" cried Poe. He had drawn his revolver in the instant Horton had pressed the button, and was covering him.

Horton stood motionless except for a tremor which shot through his tall, thin form; his eyes glinting as he shot ratlike glances from Poe to the door.

"There's no use!" cried Poe, rising slowly from his chair and approaching the other. "I've got the proofs. Better—"

Poe gave a sudden agonized leap in the air, clutched at his throat, and his revolver dropped from his nerveless hand. He twisted his burning neck with one desperate effort, and peered into the grim-set face of the servant who had let him in; the East Indian had garroted Poe; even now the silk cord was cutting closer into Poe's neck. He saw it all in the dizzy second that he reeled before all grew black. Then he felt himself falling, falling through the trap-door in the wall that had slid back silently behind him when Horton had signaled for assistance, and enabled the cat-like servant with his ready cord to take him unaware.

With the first ray of light that came with returning consciousness Christopher Poe dimly saw Burns's face anxiously peering into his own. He couldn't remember what had happened, he couldn't place himself. All that became evident to him in the following five minutes, as he lay with eyelids trembling open, trying to remember, was the fact that he was lying on a heavy silk rug and somebody strange was working over him. But Burns was present.

Suddenly a wiry black form skulked through the room, a blue-coated officer clutching the thin black neck. Then Poe suddenly remembered, and looked around to make certain that he was still in the strange apartment belonging to Horton.

He moistened his throat with a great effort, and managed to articulate:

"Well? Did you get—"

"Yes, we got him." Burns' voice came clearly, as he kneeled beside the silk rug. "We got him right. Just in time, too. He and his black minion were trying to destroy the counterfeiting plates when we managed to break through that heavy front door. We got him with the goods; he was just jumping through the window, but we had a man below. He's confessed it all—bully for you! Horton used to be an engraver on bonds for the British Government; he was located in Calcutta."

"So they found the plates and—"

"Better not talk!" put in a voice strange to Poe, and he suddenly realized the stranger was a physician.

A strained silence ensued. In ten minutes' time Christopher Poe had become quite himself, though he still passed his hand over his bruised neck mechanically, a curious half-smile illuminating his otherwise drawn face.

He finally reached into his vest-pocket, and brought out the bit of prepared paper (evidently overlooked by Horton) containing the counterfeiter's right forefinger imprint. He handed it to Burns, and watched him musingly.

In answer to his friend's anxious questioning and enthusiastic praise over the capture, Poe finally managed to sketch the whole thing to him, just what had happened when he was alone with Horton.

"How the devil did you spot the fellow?" burst out Burns.

"It was easy from the minute I noticed that misspelled 'labour,' and saw the duplicate of that finger-print you hold in your hand," he explained. "If you'll stop to think, you'll remember that Englishmen stick to the old form of spelling 'honor,' 'armor,' 'labor,' and the like. They always put in the letter 'u,' making it 'h-o-n-o-u-r,' 'a-r-m-o-u-r,' and 'l-a-b-o-u-r.'

"Well, the minute I saw that word spelled 'l-a-b-o-u-r' I knew an Englishman had done the work, and evidently had been an engraver on English stamps or securities of some sort in which the word 'labor' also appeared, and that the spelling of it had become second nature to him.

"Then I came across the finger-print on the bill; you and Mitchell didn't seem to take account of the fact that the finger-print showed in light green ink, identical with the ink used on the back of the note. That proved that the counterfeiter himself had touched it while it was still wet, or while he had a little of the fresh ink on his finger; he smeared his light mark on it without noticing. On examining that finger-mark under the microscope I was doubly sure the counterfeiter was the one who had left his mark, for I found that the ridges on the finger-print, which were loops approximating tented arches, as they classify them in the print identification system, showed callouses, the forefinger of the right hand, heavy callouses. As these were on the forefinger of the right hand, I immediately knew that the man was an engraver, for only the continuous use of the graver could have left such a mark."

Poe paused for breath, and Burns suggested:

"But that didn't give you the identity of the man."

"No. Then I found the two scars, close together on the finger-print. I figured out, by the process of elimination, about the only thing they could have been caused by. Then I suddenly recalled seeing twin scars on the finger of a snake-charmer, left by a cobra's fangs, I immediately felt these must have originated the same way. Having the facts that the man was English, had been bitten by a cobra, and that the snake was a tame one with his poison sacks removed, or the man would have died before the bite became scars, I began putting two and two together. The counterfeiter must have associated with East Indian fakirs to have been bitten by a show cobra, as they are the only ones who tame them. I recalled, too, the fact that fine paper is manufactured in India, and that some of the bonds uttered by the British Government there have silk threads in the paper, similar to our currency. I conceived the notion that a clever Englishman might have worked in the engraving-house for the government there, and come to America with this wonderful new counterfeit, and a few East Indian fakirs, his friends and servants, to help him get rid of the stuff without suspicion falling on him."

"That's just what he confessed," put in Burns.

"A woman driving her first auto acts almost as upety and haughty as a young father who is steering his own baby buggy for the first time."

For the benefit of the readers of The Freeman who are in the mountains, or at the seashore, of sojourning at the lakes, let us say that the weather here at home is fine. Gentle breezes blow through golden afternoons. At night, just now, a full moon shines upon a land of peace and plenty. The days are delightful, the evenings little short of perfect. Right now Kingston is the finest of summer resorts blessed by all the breezes of Araby. (However, if we get a chance to get away there is going to be a vacant colyum for a few weeks.)

Some folks burn their bridges behind them, and some burn theirs before them.

Connection Obvious.

A bottle plant at Bellaire, O., has resumed operations after months of idleness. The hootch season is just around the corner.

We thought some one would spring the joke about Taft adding weight to the bench.

Nurse—Why, Bobbie, you selfish little boy. Why didn't you give your sister a piece of your apple.
Bobby—I gave her the seeds. She can plant 'em and have a whole orchard."

Marking time is all right but to get anywhere you have to step right out and keep stepping.

Right now it's boot-leg whiskey. Next we'll have boot-leg cigarettes, boot-leg dancing, boot-leg movies and boot-leg ice cream sodas. Sure as sin, some of us are going to live to see boot-leg funerals.

SESKIN RAN OVER WOMAN'S ANKLE

Mrs. Helen Victor of 93 Lenox avenue New York city, who is stopping at the Cherney House at High Falls, received injuries to her ankle this morning when an automobile owned by John T. Doherty, of New York city and driven by his chauffeur Philip Seskin, ran into Mrs. Victor on Wall street. Mrs. Victor started to cross Wall street in the middle of the block and as she stepped from the curb she walked in the path of the approaching machine which was being driven slowly. Seskin immediately stopped the car and Officer Fout who was on duty at that point assisted him in getting her in the car and directed the chauffeur to drive to Dr. O'Leary's office on Fair street. An examination showed that the injuries were slight.

The fact that the car was being driven slowly at the time prevented more serious injury. On the busy streets the police department has painted white safety zones where pedestrians may cross the streets in safety but many disregard these zones and cross the streets regardless of passing traffic endangering their lives as well as making the lives of chauffeurs miserable.

At the time of the accident a truck standing alongside the curb prevented the driver of the car from seeing Mrs. Victor step from the curb directly in front of the approaching machine.

SELF DEFENSE, SAYS STEPHENSON

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Birmingham, Ala., Aug. 12.—"I am not sorry I killed him. I shot in self defense. He had struck me twice on the head and knocked me to the floor. If I had not shot him I believe he would have killed me."

These statements were made today to the International News Service by E. R. Stephenson, Methodist minister, who last night shot and killed the Very Rev. James E. Coyle, dean of North Alabama for the Catholic Church and pastor of St. Paul's Church of Birmingham.

The shooting is believed to have followed an altercation said to have been started over the marriage of Stephenson's daughter Ruth to Pedro Gussman, a Porto Rican and member of the Catholic Church by Rev. Coyle.

RAIL UNIONS DEFER ACTION

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 12.—The "big four" railroad brotherhoods will not determine their course of action upon the refusal of the executives of eastern railroads to grant their demands, before next week, Warren S. Stone, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and spokesman for the organization, delared today.

L. E. Sheppard, head of the Order of Railway Conductors, is in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and a course of action will not be mapped out before his return, it was said.

Schick-Feldman.

The ceremony uniting in marriage Miss Theresa Feldman and Peter D. Schick was performed on Tuesday, July 26, at 3 o'clock by the Rev. Thomas Corbett in the Sacred Heart Church at Eddyville. They were attended by Florence Schick, sister of the groom, and Richard Schick, cousin of the bride. Adeline MacNamee presided at the organ and played the wedding march as the bridal procession entered the church, which was prettily decorated. The bride looked charming in her gown of canton crepe. After the ceremony there followed a reception at the home of the bride's aunt. The bride and groom are both popular young people and have a host of friends who extend their best wishes. They received many beautiful presents including cut glass, linen and checks.

PROBE GILLETT'S STRIKE ACTIONS

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Albany, N. Y., Aug. 12.—Investigation of the conduct of Colonel Ransom H. Gillett of Hudson, commander of the 105th Infantry, and former assemblyman, in handling recent labor riots at Corinth, was ordered today by Adjutant General Kincaid. The inquiry follows filing of charges against Colonel Gillett by Jeremiah T. Carey, president of the Brotherhood of International Papermakers. The labor troubles which precipitated several riots occurred at the plant of the International Paper company.

Colonel Gillett is charged with conduct "unbecoming an officer and a gentleman" and with using state property "in the interest of private corporations." Colonel Gillett is said to have stationed uniformed officers of his command as agents to secure strikebreakers.

Lieutenant Colonel W. R. Wright, assistant chief of staff, Twenty-Seventh Division, will conduct the inquiry.

BOOZE FLOOD REACHES BORDER

Canada Going Dry, Permits Liquor To Clear Openly And U. S. Enforcement Officers Around Detroit Are All But Swamped.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Detroit, Aug. 12.—Sheriff Irving J. Coffin today rushed to the aid of James W. Jordan, federal prohibition enforcement officer, to check the flow of booze from Canada into the United States.

This marked the first act of Detroit officials in a cooperative effort to meet the conditions brought about by the action of Canada's custom officers in permitting liquor cargoes to clear for the United States.

"I'm ready to supply the federal agent with every available man," said the sheriff when informed of the activity along the lower river front.

With the announcement Thursday that the courts had upheld the right of Canadian disillers and brewers to ship liquor into this country, there was a wholesale demand for clearance papers. Load after load of beer and whiskey was presented for clearances and then sent to Sandwich for transfer to speed boats that have been running liquor into this city for months.

Soap From Clay.

Clay in the "colloidal form," when suitably prepared, may be satisfactorily substituted for a large proportion (up to about 50 per cent) of the fatty acids in soap. Matter may roughly be said to be in the "colloidal form" when it is in an extremely fine state of subdivision. As clay is cheap and soap relatively dear, the substitution of clay in this form for the fatty acids produces a notable reduction in cost. The clay is a real substitute for soap, and not an adulterant. Hot solutions of colloidal clay soap form jellies on cooling and thus this soap not only resembles ordinary soap in appearance, but in cleansing properties it is said to be even better than pure soap. Developments of this interesting discovery will be awaited with interest.—Discovery, London.

Long Hours in China.

The Chinese servant is wonderfully honest and efficient, says a correspondent, writing from China. He commences work early in the morning and seldom gets to bed before late at night. Moreover, he gets no night out or half day off once a week. If nature had not endowed him with a plethora of uncles, aunts and grandmothers, who are obliging enough to die at convenient times, and even to repeat the process if necessity arises, the ennui of his monotonous life would be too terrible to contemplate. Although the Chinese boy is no plaster saint, and in the genus are many worthless specimens, the average untrained boy is usually honest.

Drought Rests Australian Land.

What the snow is to Canada, drought is to Australia. It rests a land, which otherwise would exhaust itself by its own fertility. Of the amazing recuperative powers of Australian land under moderate rain, after drought that has scarified the face of the country into a grim specter of ash-dry barrenness, there is no doubt. You may ride hundreds of miles through country where the dryness is as that of Ezekiel's valley of bones, and returning three weeks later may find a green prairie of grass that sweeps your horse's knees. This will not happen everywhere; but there are innumerable parts of Australia where it is a commonplace of experience.

Fox Ranching in Europe.

Although it is not generally known, quite a number of foxes were sold last year to parties residing in Europe, mainly throughout Sweden, Norway and Switzerland. One rancher who has supplied a number of pairs to these Europeans, states that the industry is spreading in a truly wonderful manner in these countries, and that this year he expects to be able to sell practically all his foxes abroad. There is only one drawback at present to a general spread of the industry there, and that is the rather high cost of feeding, but this is being overcome, and the sale of breeding stock at good prices will amply cover the higher expense. The present rate of exchange is also a disadvantage, but this does not seem to affect those who want to start in at the business, as the Europeans are now used to this. There is most certainly a big field in Europe for the fox industry, and that it will some day amount to something big is a surety.

All England is interested in the pathetic case of Mrs. Rose E. Gooding, of Littlehampton, who has been released from Portsmouth Prison, after serving more than eight months of two sentences for crimes of which she has just been proven innocent. Mrs. Gooding, who is the mother of two small children, was sentenced to fourteen months and twelve days on being convicted of writing libellous messages. She appealed, and a decision was rendered against her. An investigation by Scotland Yard, recently completed, proved that it would have been impossible for Mrs. Gooding to have committed the offenses of which she had been convicted and sentenced. She was ordered released by the Court of Criminal Appeal in London.

Embarrassing Situation.

TO REDUCE DANGEROUS VARICOSE VEINS

People who have swollen veins or bunches should not wait until they reach the bursting point, which means much suffering and loss of time, but should at once secure from any reliable druggist a two-ounce original bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength).

By using this powerful, yet harmless germicide treatment improvement is noticed in a few days and by its regular use swollen veins will return to their normal size, and sufferers will cease to worry. Moone's Emerald Oil treatment is used by physicians and in hospitals and is guaranteed to accomplish results or money returned.

It reduces all kinds of enlarged glands, goiters and wens and is used exclusively in many large factories as an unfailing first aid to the injured antiseptic. Generous sample on receipt of 15 cents, silver or stamps. International Laboratories, Rochester, N. Y. Your druggist or McBride Stores can supply you.

PESKY BED BUGS

Bedbugs lay an average of seven eggs per day. Under favorable conditions they hatch in five days of which two-thirds are females. They mature to adult size and are capable of laying in four weeks. How many bedbugs would you have in a year if you left one female or egg unmolested for one year? To rid the pesky bedbug, you can readily see how necessary it is to use a preparation that will kill the eggs as well as the live ones. P. D. Q. has been demonstrated by the leading Hospitals, Hotels and Railroad Companies that the safest and most economical way to stop future generations of bedbugs, roaches, fleas and ants is to use the new discovery "Pesky Devils."

Quietus "P. D. Q."

Impossible for them to exist where P. D. Q. is properly used. Plain, patent spout in every package to get the pesky devils in the hard-to-get-at-places and save the juice.

Special Hospital and Hotel size $2.00 —makes five gallons of P. D. Q.—your druggist has it or can get it for you, or sent prepaid upon receipt of price by the Owl Chemical Co., Terre Haute, Ind. Success of P. D. Q. has caused imitations; genuine P. D. Q. is never peddled.

ROSE WINS TENNIS TROPHY

Randall Rose, former boys' champion of this city, acquired the local tennis title Thursday by winning the annual Forsyth trophy from Donald Mac Fadden in straight sets, 6-3, 6-3, 6-2. The winner gave a wonderful exhibition of mixing short chop strokes with a driving base line game. Mac Fadden showed several flashes of form but each time Rose would uncover enough placements to turn the tide. The well directed lobs of Rose continually caught Mac Fadden close to the net, while the latter netted many comparatively easy drives. Rose showed remarkable ability in covering the court, continually returning Mac Fadden's sharp volleys for placements.

By defeating Abraham Mariene in the finals Thursday 6-3, 2-6, 6-4, Spragne Talbot obtained the boys' championship of this city. The match was the hardest fought contest of the tourney. After Talbot had easily taken the first set, Mariene by beautiful driving captured the second frame and had his opponent 4-2 in the third and deciding set. Here Talbot rallied and by swift service and consistent driving ran out the set. The excellent playing of Mariene was a surprise to all since Talbot was considered the most experienced player.

In the first round of the men's doubles, Herzog and Flannigan won an uphill battle against Purdy and Clearwater, 2-6, 6-4, 6-1. Muller and McCauliff easily triumphed over Ewing and Miller, 6-0, 6-1. Linson and Safford conquered LeFever and Edwards, 6-3, 6-2.

SILK MILLS WON.

Willites Ahead When Score Reverted To Even Inning.

In the Industrial League Thursday evening, the Willite team representing the Willite company made its first appearance in the League, succeeding to the place vacated by the Columbia Shirt company. The game was called in the first half of the seventh by umpire Jordan. At the time of calling the score stood 11-7 in favor of the Willites but on account of a ruling of the League pertaining to games called on account of darkness, the official score was referred back to the last even inning, the 6th, when it was 7-2 in favor of the silk mills. Bruck and Caunitz and Borho were the battery for Willite. Ellsworth and Hoffman and Roosa for silk mills.

MAKES TWO-THIRDS MORE JAM FROM SAME AMOUNT OF FRUIT, AND NEVER FAILS

The rich flavor of ripe, luscious plums is now easily preserved for Winter to serve with meats and to spread on bread, toast and biscuit. Good plum jam has always been considered an uncommon preserve because so difficult to make well.

A new and never-failing method has now been discovered with which anyone can make an excellent quality quickly and more economically. With the Certo Process full-ripe plums are used—not unripe ripes as necessary by the old method. The Certo Process retains all the rich flavor of this ripe fruit because it requires only one minute's boiling, not the 30 or more minutes required by the old method which destroyed the flavor and made it difficult to distinguish as plum. With Certo the result is a far superior fruity flavor and two-thirds more jam from the same amount of fruit, because no juice is boiled away. It also banishes all guesswork or worry as perfect results are certain.

The Certo Process for making plum jam is very simple. Measure 4 cups (2 lbs.) of sliced and crushed ripe plums (pitted if desired) into large preserving kettle and add ¼ cup of water. Bring to a boil, stirring well; cover kettle and simmer for 10 minutes. Then add 6 heaping cups (3 lbs.) of sugar and mix well. Bring to a vigorous boil, stirring constantly and boil hard for one minute. Remove from fire and add ½ bottle (scant ½ cup) of Certo while stirring. Let stand one minute, skim and put into glasses. Makes 7½ pints or 10 half-pound glasses of jam.

Certo is a pure fruit product—contains no gelatine or preservatives. It positively saves time, fruit, flavor of ripe fruit and guesswork. It makes all kinds of jams and jellies with fresh or canned fruit—some you have never made before. It is highly endorsed by all cooking experts who have used it. Every woman who tries it recommends it to her friends and says she'll never be without it. And Certo jams and jellies keep as well as any ever made. Get a bottle of Certo and a recipe book from your grocer or druggist at once. For extra free copies of Certo Book of Recipes, write Pectin Sales Co. Inc., 260 East Avenue, Rochester, N. Y.

Start the new, the sure, quick, economical way of making jams and jellies. You'll never return to the old "hit or miss" method.

If you are unable to obtain Certo at your grocer's or druggist's, please telephone Miss Jones at Number 1875 to learn where to obtain it.

TARIFF VALUES PLAN SETTLED

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Washington, Aug. 12.—While most of the members of the senate took advantage of a week end recess and turned their attention away from legislative affairs, Republican members of the senate finance committee locked themselves up today and pounded away on the Fordney tariff bill with the announced intention of formally adopting the modified American valuation plans before nightfall.

Senator Penrose and other Republicans of the committee have already accepted the general principle of American valuations as laid down by the house. Official adoption of the provision hinges on the approval of certain elaborations made at the suggestion of customs experts of the treasury department with a view to making the terms of the bill easier to understand and to avoid litigation in enforcing the act.

The valuations clause will undoubtedly state specifically that the comparable wholesale selling price in the United States is to be the basis of levying the duty, and that, in cases where the American selling price cannot be established, the basis will be the selling price of the comparable imported articles.

The finance committee stood ready today to authorize the treasury department to put from twenty-five to fifty special agents at work gathering the data and information that will be required in the operation of the American valuations provision.

Chairman Fordney of the house ways and means committee and Congressman Longworth conferred with the finance committee relative to the passage in the senate of the bill to extend the dye embargo until November 27. This measure was passed by the house following an urgent request from President Harding.

Secretary of Commerce Hoover filed with the finance committee a printed statement of his views of the American valuations plan, of which he is said to approve. Hoover is also understood to have suggested to the committee that a limit be placed upon the profits which may be made by American manufacturers of coal tar products in event of an embargo on dyes is continued past the present emergency period.

The Grange had their usual big time at the annual lawn fete, a larger crowd than usual attending. Everything was sold with such rapidity it taxed the efforts of those in waiting, and the chairman wishes to thank all those who so ably assisted in helping and otherwise making it a success. There was some disappointment about the music, but Louis Shaw of Kingston very kindly helped out by furnishing a Victrola for the dancing. Mrs. William Legg won the watermelon.

The dance which was to have taken place on that evening had to be postponed on account of the hall being taken over by new management. From now on, for the rest of the season, these popular dances will be held every Tuesday and Friday evenings as usual. Music by Genihner's orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Kieffer and daughter, Elizabeth, are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joel Brink.

The play presented by the Good Citizenship Club of Hurley insures an enjoyable evening to all who love good acting and especially when the girls' parts are interpreted by the boys, as in this play. It will be given for the benefit of the Lake Katrine Sunday school and the Good Citizenship Club, who are working for a moving picture machine. Everyone in the vicinity is urged to keep this date in mind. Ice cream and cake for sale at close.

GREEKS ARE WORRIED OVER KING'S "EVIL EYE"

Babe Constantine Sponsored Passes Away Soon After the Monarch Held Him.

That King Constantine of Greece is no mascot has long been the opinion of Venizelists, and now even those who welcomed him back are beginning to wonder if he was not better at a distance. Nothing but misfortunes have come to the country since he returned.

Exchange has gone down; the price of bread gone up; the Treaty of Sevres is not only suspended but threatened with rupture at the hands of Kemal Pasha; trade is bad; class after class is being called to the colors, and the dreams of a few months ago have proved to be very, very vain.

The monarch's supporters called those things the natural result of the Venizelos policy. "He sowed the wind; you are reaping the whirlwind," they said. But something has occurred to make even Venizelo's bitterest enemies unable to put the blame on him.

A newspaper man who had worked hard for Constantine before and since his restoration lately became the proud father of a boy. Anxious to flatter so useful an ally the king offered to stand godfather to the robust baby. The parents were delighted and the christening took place. A few minutes after Constantine had held him in his arms the infant died. The doctors can give no explanation, as the child had been very healthy.

The Venezelists insist that the king has the evil eye and the only way to rid Greece of its misfortunes is to send him away again.

TEACHES BIBLE BY DUCKING

Mother Warned to Be Less Severe With Children.

Threats of a ducking in the river may be an effective method of compelling children to learn their Bible, but it does not meet the approval of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Agents of the society have recently induced a western Massachusetts mother to adopt more approved educational methods.

Investigators sent out in response to protests from neighbors learned that it was the woman's custom when any of the children failed to give strict attention to Bible study, to place the offender in a burlap bag, throw it over her shoulder and march down to the river bank. Dangling the bag over the cold water with threats of immersion usually brought quick acquiescence in her demand for closer perusal of the commandments and beatitudes.

The plan apparently had been in operation for some time, for several of the older children in the large family were found to be able to recite long passages of the Scriptures without hesitation.

Revival of Ancient Order in Peru.

The government of Peru, on the eve of the centenary celebration, revived the Order of the Sun. There are four classes of membership, the grand cross, grand officer, commander and officer. Admission and promotions will take place only on July 28 of each year, the national holiday of Peru. The name of this order dates back to the Inca empire, one of the oldest civilizations in the New World. Membership can be granted to Peruvians, military and civilians, who have rendered themselves worthy of distinction, and to foreigners who have made patent their interest in Peru.

His Own Music Better Than Ether.

His own music so soothes Oscar J. Keller of South Boston that he preferred it to ether while hospital surgeons were probing for a bullet in his thigh. When the doctors started to put Keller under the influence of the anesthetic he objected strenuously. Then he called for his harmonica, jumped upon the operating table and played gayly while the bullet was removed.

...OUR THE WHOLE SECTION

Girl Availed Herself Thoroughly of Courtesy Extended to Her by Fellow Traveler.

Some of us remember the story of the camel that wanted to put his nose into the master's tent to warm a bit. Well, that camel is still alive. The other day she got on the train, dressed very prettily and looked as if she were used to having half the world whenever she wished it. But she didn't get it, for all the Pullman seats were taken.

Finally a middle-aged man, noticing her discomfiture motioned to the Pullman conductor. "I have this whole section reserved," he explained, "and since this young lady only goes to Evansville she may have a seat in it."

Courtly, he rose from his seat facing the engine and indicated that she was to have it while he would ride backward. While he stood waiting for her to settle herself in it she lifted her grip, put it on the seat facing her, draped her coat beside it, also her hat, magazines, purse and a box of candy. Then she stretched herself in the choice seat, leaving not an inch of room for any other person to occupy.

For a long minute the man stood regarding the bit of space beside the hat and candy box. Then he turned on his heel and went into the smoking car to stay until the train reached Evansville.—Indianapolis News.

JOY THAT COMES BUT ONCE

Statesman Recalls Thrill of Delight That Came to Him in His Schoolboy Days.

William C. Redfield, former secretary of commerce, says that he can recall with microscopic distinctness the moment that gave him the biggest thrill of delight in his whole life. It was when he was going to school and trying to master long division.

There are four skips over from where he sat a boy yawned. It was not an ordinary yawn, but one of such genuine expression of feeling toward things in general that it attracted Redfield's attention.

He was fortunate in having a pencil and slate at hand, ready for any emergency, and he aimed this at the boy's cavernous mouth. By one of those rare exhibitions of magnanimity on the part of an inanimate object, the pencil went right square into the goal, and Redfield's joy knew no bounds. He had pinged the one chance in a million and won.

Encouraged by his dexterity in that instance, Redfield then tried throwing slate at knots in wooden fairs, but never again did he exhibit such marksmanship.

FIRST HORSE CAR HERE

Made Its Initial Trip 55 Years Ago Saturday.

On August 13, 1866, fifty-five years ago Saturday, the first horse car was run over Kingston and Rondout railroad between the then two villages. There were four horses hitched in front of the car an old time stage driver of those days, being known as Joany Kiefer handled the reins. Another man handled the brake. Goeller's brass band was on the car playing tunes and Major Thomas Cornell and the directors of the railroad company and of the villages were passengers on a trip over the line which was from the car barn on Bridge street, now Washington avenue, the barn being near where the U. & D. and O. & W. tracks now cross Washington avenue, the terminus in the village of Rondout being at the Rhinecliff ferry. The first horse cars were of quite large size and beside a driver carried a conductor to notify the driver when to start and stop and collect half way fares, the passengers going through from one end of the line to the other paying their fare to Richard Van Gaasbeck at a toll gate that was on Union avenue, (now Broadway), a short distance south of Staples street.

DEDUCT FEDERAL TAX

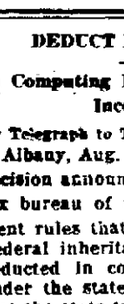

In Computing Income Under State Income Tax.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Albany, Aug. 12.—In an important decision announced today the income tax bureau of the state tax department rules that payments under the Federal inheritance tax law may be deducted in computing net income under the state income tax law but that the state transfer or inheritance tax is not deductible. Up to this time the bureau has held that neither tax was an allowable deduction. The deduction of the Federal inheritance tax may be made only by executors and administrators and not by beneficiaries.

ANXIOUS MOMENT FOR DADDY

Physician's Halting Speech Made Him Fear the Worst, at Least for a Little While.

A certain physician almost invariably stutters when under the stress of excitement. Some time ago he had occasion to officiate on an important occasion, and his vocal infirmity was the cause of a funny misapprehension.

The husband and prospective father—who, by the way, had set his heart on a son and heir—was pacing the library when his doctor entered.

"Well, doctor," cried the husband, forcing a smile, "is it twins?"

"Triplets! Great Caesar!"

"Qu-qu qu—" stammered the doctor.

"Quadruplets! Holy smoke!"

"No, no," cried the doctor. "Qu ququite the contrary. Tr-tr-try and ta-take it ph-philosophically. It's a girl."

Remarkable Disappearance.

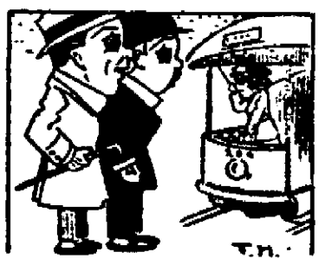

Perhaps the most remarkable disappearance in modern times of a prominent public man was that of James Winstanley, a brilliant Oxford scholar, who won the "Hertford" nearly seventy years ago. Winstanley, having become a positivist under the influence of Congreve—one of the founders of the new religion consisting of "three persons and no God"—left Oxford and lived in retirement on his Leicestershire estate, where he devoted himself to the welfare of his dependents, built a church, and, in the year of his disappearance, was high sheriff. Just before the assizes he went to Folkestone, started for the pier to meet his mother coming from Boulogne, and was never afterward seen by his friends. A boatman at Coblenz stated that an Englishman resembling Winstanley was ferried over to Ehrenbreitstein, and he was supposed to have been drowned; but those who best know his temperament thought it possible that he had immured himself in a monastery.

China's Concrete Work.

Owing to the high cost of timber in China, it has been found economical to make railway sleepers and electric transmission line poles of reinforced concrete. The sleepers are reinforced with old mine cable, states Engineering News-Record, and are cured under water before use. New track is not supplied with concrete sleepers, but laid with ordinary wooden sleepers, which are afterward replaced by concrete when the road bed is well settled. The poles are 40 feet and 50 feet high, and are cast horizontally. They are hollow for four-fifths of their length, square section, and taper, and some of the reinforcing rods are carried above and below the pole to act as lightning conductors. In both cases the concrete mix is 1:2:4, and the poles and sleepers have given complete satisfaction.—Scientific American.

Hen Drives Mother From Kittens.

Three kittens which were deserted by their mother were adopted by a hen, says a Nova Scotia reader. The hen discovered the kittens in a cow's manger and after watching them for some time sat on them. She was chased away and the mother cat was put with its young, but the old hen went back and chased the cat and claimed the kittens. How the kittens were fed is not known.

DOING FINE

"How's that pretty conductorette making out? Can she make 'em step lively?"

Died While Chloroforming Cat.

A Pennsylvania railroad engineer lost his life when he attempted to chloroform a pet cat at his home in Paoli, Pa., while his family was away. The cat scratched and struggled as he tried to hold the chloroformed rag to its nose. He fell unconscious and died from the fumes. The cat ran away.

Special Carriage for Quadruplets.

A furniture store in New Haven, Conn., announces that it is having a special quadruplet baby carriage made in Leominster that will shortly be presented to the quadruplets that have recently been born to Mr. and Mrs. Zalos of New Haven.

Prolific Ewe.

A man in Nova Scotia reports that a ewe owned by his neighbor gave birth to a lamb; two weeks later the same ewe gave birth to twins. The first lamb died shortly after birth, but the twins are still alive and progressing.

SAID THE CAPTAIN.

"You never can tell," said the Captain,
"What a bloomin' Frenchy'll do'
Colonials fight like hell for the right
(The same as I and you).
And a Tommy is always grouchy,
And a Kiltie is always blue,
But nobody knows of the wop that blows,
Or the bird they call poilu!

"There's a Christ at every crossroads
In France," the Captain said,
"Battered and shattered by shrapnel,
Minus an arm or head!
There's a Christ or a Virgin Mary
Painted in blue and red,
They gave godspeed to the living,
And they give good sleep to the dead!

"We always saluted a wayside shrine,
When the company passed it by,
And once on the eve of battle,
While the gun-glare lit the sky,
And the shells were singing over,
We came to a cross nailed high—
And a Christ with a poilu's helmet
Cocked rakishly over an eye!

"I've never been overly pious,
But I wheeled my horse right there,
And rode to the cross, and, standing
In my stirrups, reached in air,
When a voice in the column shouted:
'Oh, Captain! Leave it there!'
'Twas a lad climbed up and left his own,
For the Savior's head was bare!"

"We charged from the front line trenches
At dawn," the Captain said,
"And I woke when night had fallen,
In a little white hospital bed
On the cot next to mine was moaning
A boy with a bandaged head
He cried to his mother and Jesus Christ,
In French—and then was dead!

"'Twas the lad who gave his helmet
(And his life—as each man knew!)
To shield the head of the Savior,
Painted in red and blue.
He had laughed at the sleet of shrapnel
As he laughed at the hat askew!—
So you never can tell," said the Captain,
"What a Frenchman's apt to do!"

MADE FROM DISCARDED TIRE

Swing That Will Be Decidedly Popular With the Younger Members of the Family.

We all remember the swing hung from a gnarled apple-tree out on the farm where we spent our earliest summers. A modern equivalent of the old-time swing is made from an old discarded automobile tire provided it is not in too bad a condition.

early experiences and the young rider can cling comfortably to the rounded sides.

Suspending the tire from a single rope permits of a variety of gymnastics the rotating motion being very popular with the small boy and girl.—Leon Adelman in Popular Science Monthly.

Too Much for Him.

Little Willie, after flattening his nose against the outside of the baker's window for about half an hour, at last entered with his mind evidently made up.

"I want to know," he said in a determined yet hopeful voice, "how much those wedding cakes are?"

"Well," answered the enterprising proprietor, "I have them at all prices. Tell your mother that I can do h a beauty for $20. The cheapest is $10."

Willie sighed.

Dog Has Fun With Rooster.

A farm collie dog in western Ontario has a novel antagonist: the dog seizes the farm rooster by the neck, holding the bird's head to the ground, never inflicting an injury. The wrath of the bird on being released is unbounded. On being again attacked the dog slyly secures the neck hold after some playful sparring. The conflict is heralded by much noise from the angry bird and the stunned dog.

Chicken Raised With Kittens.

A cat with three kittens, in Nova Scotia, adopted a motherless chicken two weeks old. It would lie down with the kittens and cat and go to sleep. It would try to eat like the kittens and the cat and kittens tried to play with her. She stayed with the cat except nights until she was old enough to go with the other fowl.

Coincidences in Births.

Two sisters residing in Helen's Mills, Fitz county, Pa., each became the mother of twins on the same day, all four of the newcomers being boys. The two marriages occurred only a short time apart last year. Both mothers and the twins are in excellent condition.

Unfortunate Farmers.

Most Intelligent Animal.

Scientists say that the chimpanzee is superior to any other animal except man. Next in order comes the gorilla, then the orang-outang. The baboon, still another variety of ape, comes fourth.

Caruso of China.

Lou Hoong-Shen, the Caruso of China, is dead. You never heard of him? Yet, he died in a Shanghai theater that had contracted to pay him $10,000 a week. That's a big salary. It is phenomenally big in China, where a few cents a day will hire a strong man. Born of poor parents, Lou Hoong-Shen had to scramble for a living. But, though China is a land of musical voices (as anyone will testify who has listened to the songs of the hawker and the coolie), the boy Lou stood alone. He had the most wonderful voice among 400,000,000 Chinese. Despite this, he had to work hard before he became great. For many years he was a musician—a Chinese actor. Ten years ago he was "discovered" in Shanghai. At once he quit the point and weird garb of a Chinese actor and became a musical star. By odd coincidence, the great Chinese tenor died from a bowstring wound in his throat, similar to that which threatened to take the life of Caruso, now convalescent.

Fairyland Pavilion.

As a fitting complement to a swimming pool built on a Connecticut estate recently, a fairyland pavilion has been erected, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. This boat has all the features of a regular craft of its type, being equipped above with a flybridge, life preservers, funnel and pilot house. The cabin is a spacious dance floor, where diversion from the swimming sport may be indulged in. The swimming pool forms a forward deck for the ferry, and is surrounded by a sidewalk set with benches and chairs.

Here is a daring stunt of a man jumping from the roof of a dwelling house after being pursued by villains bent on having his life. The picture shows the pursued, just after he had made the leap from the roof, reaching out with his umbrella for the convenient telegraph wire along which he later made his way. It all happened in Berlin, where they are filming a series of detective stories, in which the man in the photograph is the hero. Even Douglas Fairbanks would think before attempting to do a jump like that.

LOWTHER DIED OF APOPLEXY

The body of George Lowther, who so mysteriously disappeared at Ravena last Monday after he had taken the West Shore way freight from this city to Ravena, was found in the woods about a mile from the railroad Thursday morning by two boys who with a dog were searching the nearby woods. Since Mr. Lowther disappeared and failed to show up Tuesday to bring his train back to Kingston a number of residents have been assisting the county authorities and state troopers in searching the woods in the vicinity. The belief that Mr. Lowther met with foul play was given up Thursday when an autopsy was performed and it was established that Mr. Lowther had died of apoplexy.

Mr Lowther evidently after leaving the barber shop at Ravena where he was last seen alive by John Reidy, a West Shore engineer, had gone to the woods in search of berries as he said he was going to do and while there was taken ill and being unable to summon assistance died.

When Mr. Lowther failed to show up for the run back to Kingston it was feared that he had met with foul play and the body hidden in the woods When the body was found Thursday morning there were rumors circulated about Ravena to the effect that there was a bullet hole in the head This was denied by the Albany county authorities and coroner and at the autopsy it was learned that Mr. Lowther died from natural causes.

Coroner W N Conner went to Ravena Thursday night and brought the body to Kingston. The funeral, which will be private, will be held from the late residence, No. 482 Hasbrouck avenue on Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock Interment will be in Mountain View cemetery, Saugerties

Former Mayor Roscoe Irwin presided at the meeting, and addressed the Democrats present and City Judge Harry Schirick, who has been designated for renomination, and Thomas P. Coughlin, the Democratic designation for alderman-at-large, made speeches and aroused the faithful present to enthusiasm.

After those at the meeting who had a vote and are enrolled Democrats had signed the designation certificates an adjournment was taken until August 19.

Hurt Avoiding Hitting Boy.

H. Haner of Catskill was severely injured Tuesday night when he avoided hitting a boy while driving in the Smoky Hollow road near Catskill. As Haner came round a bend the boy stepped off from the running board of a car upon which he was standing and into the middle of the road Haner turned the car sharply toward the ditch with the result that the machine was overturned and Haner pinned beneath it. He was rescued and taken to the office of Dr. L. H. Honeyford, where his injuries were treated

The Strange Adventures of Christopher Poe

By ROBERT CARLTON BROWN

(Copyright, 1920, by W. G. Chapman.)

THE MISSPELLED WORD

"Well, hello, Poe! Glad to see you back from the wilds of New Orleans and Mexico," greeted Mitchell, President of the Bankers' Protective Association, as Poe stepped into his private room, unannounced, the second day after his return from Mexico.

"I was just on the point of calling you up," continued Mitchell.

"Saved you a nickel, then," drawled Christopher Poe, dropping into a chair, and beginning to fan himself slowly with his hat. "What's new? You look as though you'd just sidestepped a bomb."

"Something interesting," Mitchell announced, glancing uneasily at the door, a trifle open. Rising abruptly, he stepped over, and shut it securely. Coming back, he reached out mechanically, as though he had made the same motion a hundred times that day, and drew from a pigeon-hole a handful of crisp five-dollar bills, thrusting them into Poe's fingers with nervous quickness.

"Is this hush money, or a donation to the head office boy of the Bankers' Protective, which capacity I so humbly fill?" asked Poe, lifting a highly arched eyebrow, and holding it quivering for a questioning moment.

"Look it over," said Mitchell, turning sidewise, and drumming nervously on a magnifying-glass he had dropped at Poe's entrance.

Christopher Poe separated one of the bills from the package, held it first to the light, started slightly, and then quickly turned the bill face up, and smoothed it over his knee, bending close to examine it. Quick as thought he snatched the magnifying-lens from Mitchell's fingers, and studied the bill for a full minute. Then he looked up and smiled

"Why, it's at least a millimeter out. Nobody's ever been able to get old General Jackson's jaw just right, except the man who made the genuine plate. It's been tried often, hasn't it?"

"There are two other counterfeits of that bill," answered Mitchell. "Neither of them any good at all. But this is different. They found out the bill was bad by that lengthy jaw. But that bill's been slipping through several banks for a week or more. Think of it! Just discovered today. Good-looking bill, isn't it? Paper fine, print has the proper snap; everything right but that jaw; it's just a hair less than a millimeter too long, as you noticed. I knew it wouldn't escape you."

"How much of the stuff is out?"

"Nearly twenty thousand is in!" cried Mitchell. "It's a fine mess! God knows how much is out! Think of it! Think of New York banks being fooled on bunches of this stuff; they've taken in twenty thousand dollars, and the roll you have there contains samples of it all."

"But it's the best paper I've ever seen!" exclaimed Christopher Poe, slightly flushed, having turned again to the bill. "The counterfeiter hasn't missed on a thing but that jaw, and how any man could duplicate that is more than I can tell. President Jackson's jaw was a lucky thought on that '07 note; nobody could ever copy his head exactly as it's reproduced on the bill. It's a lantern jaw, so shaped that it can stand the extra millimeter and escape notice. But that paper is what worries me It looks just like the real thing. That fellow must have got hold of a batch of the real stuff somewhere. Measurements are exactly right. The two scatter-silk lines running through the bill are correct. By George, here's a mystery worth a man's trouble!"

Poe turned the certificate over.

"Remarkable!" he exclaimed, having examined the green and white webbing, put on with the effect of fan-tracery in the cathedrals, in intricate design, difficult to imitate

"There's nothing else out of proportion but Jackson's jaw?" queried Christopher Poe, glancing at the fine printing on the green back of the note [illegible] legal tender at its face value—

"No, they didn't report anything else, and I haven't found a thing"

Poe paid no attention to the reply; he seemed deeply interested in the printing, reading it carefully through the magnifier. Suddenly, right at the end, he stopped, and looked at Mitchell quizzically.

Handing Mitchell the bill and pointing to the printing, he queried:

"Have you read this?"

"No, I dare say that's all right. The fellow wouldn't likely be such a shrewd engraver and make any mistake on the plain printing"

"Suppose you read it, then." Poe handed him the bill and pulled up another, holding it far from his eyes, and staring at it absently.

Presently Mitchell read the following usual form printed on the back of the 1907 five-dollar note:

"This note is a legal tender at its face value for all debts public and private except duties on imports and interest on the Public Debt. Counterfeiting or altering this note or passing any fraudulent or altered bill is punishable by Five Thousand ($5,000) Dollars FINE, or Fifteen (15) years imprisonment at Hard Labour or both."

"Well?" he said, looking up

"You wouldn't amount to much in working out one of these advertising puzzles where they offer a prize for finding the misspelled word," replied Poe

"There was something near the last," reflected Mitchell. "Some word seemed out of its regular appearance."

"Read it again," suggested Poe.

"Oh, I see!" cried the other, having glanced through the last line once more "It's the word 'labour;' that should be spelled 'labor.'"

"That's what Webster says."

"It's not one of the usual ways of detecting a counterfeit. I wouldn't ever think of reading the printing on a bill"

"The little things count."

"But surely you can't see any clue in that misspelling?"

"I certainly have an inkling to the counterfeiter from it," was the abrupt reply, as Poe rapidly thumbed through the stack of five-dollar bills, looking first at one side and then the other, and paying no attention to Mitchell's importunate questions.

Finally he folded the roll carefully and placed it in his breast-pocket.

"I'll take these with me, if you don't need them," he said. "Tell me, where have those things been passed?"

"Mostly around New York. It's funny, the counterfeiting band doesn't seem to have many agents outside, most of it has cropped out in Brooklyn; but then, this is the first batch, and I suppose we'll soon be getting others from the interior states."

Poe secured a list of the banks that had been caught on the bills and departed.

He went at once to his rooms, where he spent several hours closely examining each bill. Finally he separated one from the lot, the only one which showed a slight difference from the others. This he put beneath the magnifying-glass, and studied it at great length. Only one portion of the bill interested him, it was the white spot on the back, at the left, balancing the frame which contained the printed notice with "labor" misspelled.

On that blank spot was the light impression of a finger. Poe bent close over it, and followed the light ridges which had left their impressions Evidently he was classifying the kind of mark it was, in accordance with the system of finger-print identification. He studied away, mumbling quick phrases to himself, according to a habit he could not break:

"First finger, right hand. Loops approx. tented arches—eleven ridges—ulnar—outer terminus—accidentals. Callus—engraver—graver. Hmmmm—curious—twins—needles, no!—ah! East India. Fakir. Paper. I—"

Christopher Poe dropped the magnifier, and swung around to the telephone at his elbow. In a minute's time he was connected with Mitchell.

"How about the Coney Island bank?" he asked. "How much of the queer was shoved off there?"

"They took in seven thousand of it, nearly. Got in heaviest there. Doesn't seem possible; but it's the cleverest counterfeit ever made."

"And the Brooklyn National?"

"Stuck for nearly five thousand."

"Good!" Poe started to hang up when Mitchell's voice broke in anxiously:

"I hope you're not trusting entirely to that misspelled word? I don't see anything in that."

"No, I've got a finger-print to work on now. Just discovered it on one of the notes"

"Is that so?" the voice became anxious. "Suppose I run over and have a look at it."

"Better hurry, then," replied Poe. "It's after three now, and I've got to get out to Coney before supper." He paused, started to hang up, and then called, "Bring Burns with you."

The pair of bankers arrived shortly, and Poe showed them the finger prints he had discovered Both looked at it carefully, but neither believed that it was an important discovery.

"Why," insisted Mitchell, that finger print could have been left by any of a hundred people who might have handled the bill."

"Then how on earth are you going to find the man? It's impossible You say he can't be an old crook, and his work certainly isn't that of any one I recognize You aren't going to look at everybody's fingers until you find the one that matches this, are you?" queried Burns.

"Hardly that," smiled Poe. "Since you fellows are so skeptical, I won't trouble to tell you my theory at all But, Burns, suppose you run over to Coney Island with me this afternoon. We may bump into something interesting"

"All right" Burns shrugged his shoulders doubtfully. "You dope things out pretty well, Chris, but I haven't much faith in your clue this time. It leaves too much to chance."

Burns and Poe started in a taxi for Coney Island at once, leaving Mitchell behind.

Arrived at the famous resort, the taxi dodged in and out among the crowding vehicles, and finally came to a quivering halt before the central police station. Leaving Burns outside, Poe hurried in, and was at once admitted to the Captain of the district, under the name of Hardy. By showing credentials from the Bankers Protective Association Poe gained the Captain's interest, and quickly explained about the counterfeit five-dollar bills.

"We've had several complaints of them the last few days," answered the Captain. They've been in circulation a couple of weeks, I guess, but nobody detected them till the banks finally got wise Best counterfeit I ever saw. Frankly, I can't tell them from the genuine, except when somebody points out the fact that the jaw on the portrait of Jackson is a bit too long."

Poe plunged at once into the purpose of his visit.

"Will you kindly give me what records you have of East Indian jugglers in shows here, preferably those managed by Englishmen?"

The Captain turned to a directory and skimmed through it

"There's lots of East Indian troupes this year," he said. "Here are some addresses. But you don't suspect those fellows, do you?"

"Not exactly," was the reply, as Poe rapidly copied down the names and addresses. Many occupations were included in the list; some were jugglers, others fortune-tellers, dancers, dervishes, snake-charmers, and magicians. The whole list was quite long and the Captain could offer but little information concerning the management of the Indian performers.

Thanking the officer for his courtesy, Poe left at once, pulled Burns into the vestibule of the building, tore the list of names in half, and asked:

"Have you much money with you?"

"About fifty dollars, I guess," answered Burns, feeling of his wallet

"Well, here's a hundred in tens I brought an extra amount. Take it, and go to all the shows at these addresses; pay in tens, and keep separate all the five-dollar bills you get in change. Ask at each place who the manager is, have it understood that you want to hire some jugglers for a show. If you stumble onto any bunch of East Indians with an English manager, take his name and address. Then meet me here at exactly nine o'clock.

"All right," answered Burns blankly, but he was too well acquainted with Poe's methods to ask useless questions.

Poe only smiled, sat tight, and waited.

Poe began at once his circuit of the shows employing East Indians He paid everywhere with a ten or twenty-dollar bill, and always stuffed the notes he received in change into a separate pocket, without more than glancing at them. At each show he studied the name of the manager, and secured several addresses.

Finally, having found nothing of immediate interest, and it being almost time to rejoin Burns he slipped back to the police station, and, picking out a vacant corner in the vestibule, turned his back to the door, rapidly thumbing over the collection of bills he had received in change. There were nine five-dollar bills in the lot. To his great satisfaction, on examining President Jackson's jaw on each he found that six were identical with the counterfeit bills he had studied all afternoon

Burns came shortly, with six five-dollar bills received in change at East India shows, two of them were counterfeits

Christopher Poe put the false money away carefully and stood for a moment, thoughtfully running his thin hand through his damp brown hair; the corners of his mouth twitched, and two deep wrinkles appeared, joining the lips to the nostrils in heavy furrows.

"How many managers did you see on earth?" he asked Burns abruptly.

"Only two," was the reply.

Poe took the names and addresses compared them quickly with the several he had procured, and then, his eyes lighting up strangely, remarked:

"You stay here; if I'm not back in one hour, get the Police Captain to give you eight officers and come at once to these two addresses. It's evident the bad money is emanating from these East Indians. I want to talk it over alone with their managers Send four of the policemen to this first address on Surf Avenue, and you come along to the Coney Island Bowery yourself with the other four. If entrance is denied at either address, force is to be used"

Without a word Poe darted out of the building, and threw himself into the tangle of merry-makers in the street It was a gay night at Coney, and with difficulty Poe made speed to the address on Surf Avenue.

There he found a roomy lodging above a moving-picture show, and asked for the proprietor, one of the two managers of East India shows he had picked out to call upon.

He received information that the man was not in and wouldn't be until the next day. Somewhat disappointed, Poe walked slowly down the steps and stood for a moment in the curb

Then he glanced at the card. The other name and address was:

EDGEWORTH HORTON,
75 BOWERY.

Deep, cynical wrinkles between nose and mouth formed unconsciously; he drew his broad-brimmed straw hat close over his eyes, and turned quickly into the Bowery

At number 75 Christopher Poe found a big gay music-hall, with the stereotyped dancing and singing girls On the lurid bill in front was a huge advertisement.

SPECIAL
NAUTCH DANCERS
JUGGLERS
SNAKE CHARMERS

As he came to "Snake-Charmers" on the list, the banker-detective's eyebrows shot up in sudden interest; then he walked into the cafe, and seated himself at a table. It was a large, substantial place, doing a tremendous business, and Poe took in all the details carefully, noting the height of the ceiling and the two passages upstairs, one on either side.

Having taken a sip of the tasteless beer placed before him, Poe slipped from his chair, and walked through one of the side doors, ascending a narrow flight of stairs

At the top was a big door, closed. Poe stepped up, and knocked on it. A full minute he waited, vaguely conscious of the fact that unseen eyes were peering at him from somewhere near by

Suddenly the door swung open noiselessly, and an East Indian servant, dressed severely in black silk, bowed to him with a funereal grin.

"I should like to see Mr. Horton," said Poe in a hurried, business-like tone. "I'm from Atlantic City, you know Tell him Mr Hardy. I've got two new places over there, and I'd like to get hold of a good troupe of East Indians."

The servant bowed, took the proffered card, bowed again, and abruptly slammed the door in Poe's face.

"Cool one!" exclaimed the banker. "Wonder where he was watching me from before he opened the door He certainly's got some look-out hole. Didn't look at me curiously, must have been watching me."

Two minutes elapsed, the door slid open, and the East Indian bowed him to enter

It was a strangely cool and restful apartment, seemingly far removed from screeching, gaudy Coney, though below was a riotous music hall, and there was a break-neck toboggan with shrieking joy-riders just across the street.

Poe noted with interest the thickness of that front door. It was at least eight inches, doubtless to make it sound proof.

Having been guided through a pleasant little reception room with several heavy chairs and a deep-napped carpet, Poe was ushered into a large square room, quite plain; a representative office of busy America.

A gray-haired, thin faced man of indeterminate age sat in a large square chair before a roll-top desk. He was alone, and looked up with a quick, engaging smile as Poe entered.

"Mr. Hardy?" he said interrogatively, with an English intonation. "So glad to see you. Beastly hot tonight, eh't it? I'd die if it weren't for the electric fans."

"You've got a fine place here," answered Christopher Poe, assuming the rough good-fellowship of the American show-manager "It's as cool as beer and as quiet as Rajputana."

"Oh, you've been to India then—and the desert?" queried Horton, motioning Poe to a chair, and drawing up his interestedly, as he dismissed the servant with a nod.

Only once, thank goodness, and you'll never get me there again," answered Poe, after the well-nigh inimitable manner of your typical American business man who abhors a vacation and loathes a change of scene, be it outside of his own country. "First time I made a big stake, took my wife. She liked it. Well, it wasn't so bad. Gave me lots of good ideas for shows."

"Born fakirs—the natives—aren't they?" smiled the Englishman easily, it being quite evident from his manner that he was sure of his visitor, and had sized him up for just what Poe chose to be considered.

"They're the best in the business," answered Poe enthusiastically. "I came all the way from Atlantic City to look up a troupe, and it's been an awfully hot day. Haven't you got a few to spare—a juggler or a snake-charmer?"

"Oh, I might spare one or two. I've quite a number of them, but I could only lease them to you; might need them next season, you know"

"Oh, certainly, I understand that. They don't care who they work for, I guess," replied Poe in the same brusque manner "I've got a friend in the British Government service in Calcutta. He says you've got to treat the natives as though they were dogs. He has a bunch of them working for him, running printing-presses or something; says they're all right if you knock 'em down once a day"

"Indeed," smiled Horton, "that's about right. But I'm interested. I have friends in the government employ over there. Perhaps I know this chap you speak of; you say he's in the British engraving-department?"

"Printing or something like that," answered Poe "His name is Gerver. Hasn't been there long"

"Gerver, Gerver," repeated the other, "no, can't say I've heard of him. Perhaps he's—"

"Got bit by a cobra once, had the wound cauterized—"

Christopher Poe broke off abruptly in his interruption as Horton stirred in his chair and gave him a strange look, at the same time the forefinger of his right hand twitched and crooked up convulsively.

"What's the matter? One bite you too?" queried Poe, calling attention to the other's uneasiness.

"No—yes," said Horton, confused. Then he smiled quickly, as though reassuring himself, shoved his right forefinger beneath Poe's gaze and cried: "Look! There's where one got me. I'll never forget it." Two small white scars showed on the finger, close together, sunk like pock-marks beneath heavy callouses The grooves in the lower part of Poe's face showed deep for a moment; he took the finger, and examined the scars carefully.

"So that's the sign the cobra's fangs leave!" he exclaimed. "How'd you get out of it alive?"

"Oh, he was a tame one, belonging to one of my snake-charmers. Had had his poison sacks removed. But it threw a bully scare into me all the same."

"Funny thing!" exclaimed Poe, jerking a card from his vest-pocket, and pressing the scarred finger on the prepared surface before Horton half realized what was going on. In an instant Poe had returned the paper bearing the finger-print and drawn out the five-dollar bill he had separated from the original lot of counterfeits, holding it so that Horton could plainly see the finger-mark upon it, which had first attracted Poe's attention.

"Funny thing!" continued Poe as Horton stared at him blankly, jerking away his finger and reaching for a rear pocket. "You must have fingered this bill. Here's a mark exactly like yours, scars the same; callous from handling the graver and all. I suppose—"

Horton had leaped to his feet and was glaring at Christopher Poe, eyes starting horribly. Poe only smiled, sat tight and waited

"You—you—" Horton endeavored to control himself. Then he pounced like an animal toward his desk, touched a button beneath it, and swung back, stopping with a throttled cry, a revolver half drawn from his hip-pocket.

"Wait!" cried Poe He had drawn his revolver in the instant Horton had pressed the button, and was covering him

"There's no use!" cried Poe, rising slowly from his chair and approaching the other. "I've got the proofs, sir—"

Poe gave a sudden agonized sing in the air, clutched at his throat, and his revolver dropped from his nerveless hand He twisted his burning neck with one desperate effort, and stared into the grim-set face of the servant who had let him in; the East Indian had garroted Poe; even now the silk cord was cutting closer into Poe's neck. He saw it all in the dizzy second that he reeled before all grew black. Then he felt himself falling, falling through the trap-door in the wall that had slid back silently behind him when Horton had signaled for assistance, and enabled the cat-like servant with his ready cord to take him unaware

With the first ray of light that came with returning consciousness Christopher Poe dimly saw Burns's face anxiously peering into his own. He couldn't remember what had happened, he couldn't place himself. All that became evident to him in the following five minutes, as he lay with eyelids trembling open, trying to remember, was the fact that he was lying on a heavy silk rug and somebody strange was working over him. But Burns was present.

Suddenly a wiry black form skulked through the room, a blue-coated officer clutching the thin black neck. Then Poe suddenly remembered, and looked around to make certain that he was still in the strange apartment belonging to Horton.

"Well? Did you get—"

"Yes, we got him" Burns' voice came clearly, as he kneeled beside the silk rug. "We got him right. Just in time, too He and his black minion were trying to destroy the counterfeiting plates when we managed to break through that heavy front door. We got him with the goods; he was just jumping through the window, but we had a man below. He's confessed it all—bully for you! Horton used to be an engraver on bonds for the British Government; he was located in Calcutta."

"So they found the plates and—"

"Better not talk!" put in a voice strange to Poe, and he suddenly realized the stranger was a physician.

A strained silence ensued. In ten minutes' time Christopher Poe had become quite himself, though he still passed his hand over his bruised neck mechanically, a curious half-smile illuminating his otherwise drawn face.

He finally reached into his vest-pocket, and brought out the bit of prepared paper (evidently overlooked by Horton) containing the counterfeiter's right forefinger imprint. He handed it to Burns, and watched him musingly.

In answer to his friend's anxious questioning and enthusiastic praise over the capture, Poe finally managed to sketch the whole thing to him, just what had happened when he was alone with Horton.

"How the devil did you spot the fellow?" burst out Burns.

"It was easy from the minute I noticed that misspelled 'labour,' and saw the duplicate of that finger-print you hold in your hand," he explained. "If you'll stop to think, you'll remember that Englishmen stick to the old form of spelling 'honor,' 'armor,' 'labor,' and the like. They always put in the letter 'u;' making it 'h-o-n-o-u-r,' 'a-r-m-o-u-r,' and 'l-a-b-o-u-r.'

"Well, the minute I saw that word spelled 'l-a-b-o-u-r' I knew an Englishman had done the work, and evidently had been an engraver on English stamps or securities of some sort in which the word 'labor' also appeared, and that the spelling of it had become second-nature to him

"Then I came across the finger-print on the bill; you and Mitchell didn't seem to take account of the fact that the finger-print showed in light green ink, identical with the ink used on the back of the note. That proved that the counterfeiter himself had touched it while it was still wet, or while he had a little of the fresh ink on his finger; he smeared his light mark on it without noticing. On examining that finger-mark under the microscope I was doubly sure the counterfeiter was the one who had left his mark, for I found that the ridges on the finger-print, which were loops approximating tented arches, as they classify them in the print identification system, showed callouses, heavy callouses. As these were on the forefinger of the right hand, I immediately knew that the man was an engraver, for only the continuous use of the graver could have left such a mark."

Poe paused for breath, and Burns suggested:

"But that didn't give you the identity of the man."

"No Then I found the two scars, close together on the finger-print. I figured out, by the process of elimination, about the only thing they could have been caused by. Then I suddenly recalled seeing twin scars on the finger of a snake-charmer, left by a cobra's fangs, I immediately felt these must have originated the same way. Having the facts that the man was English, had been bitten by cobra, and that the snake was a tame one with his poison sacks removed, or the man would have died before the bite became scars, I began putting two and two together The counterfeiter must have associated with East Indian fakirs to have been bitten by a show cobra, as they are the only ones who tame them. I recalled, too the fact that fine paper is manufactured in India, and that some of the bonds uttered by the British Government there have silk threads in the paper, similar to our currency I conceived the notion that a clever Englishman might have worked in the engraving-house for the government there, and come to America with this wonderful new counterfeit, and a few East Indian fakirs, his friends and servants, to help him get rid of the stuff without suspicion falling on him"

"That's just what he confessed," put in Burns.

Mrs Helen Victor of 93 Lenox avenue New York city, who is stopping at the Cherney House at High Falls, received injuries to her ankle this morning when an automobile owned by John T Doherty, of New York city and driven by his chauffeur Philip Seskin, ran into Mrs. Victor on Wall street Mrs Victor started to cross Wall street in the middle of the block and as she stepped from the curb she walked in the path of the approaching machine which was being driven slowly Seskin immediately stopped the car and Officer Fout who was on duty at that point assisted him in getting her in the car and directed the chauffeur to drive to Dr. O'Leary's office on Fair street An examination showed that the injuries were slight.

The fact that the car was being driven slowly at the time prevented more serious injury. On the busy streets the police department has painted white safety zones where pedestrians may cross the streets in safety but many disregard these zones and cross the streets regardless of passing traffic endangering their lives as well as making the lives of chauffeurs miserable.

At the time of the accident a truck standing alongside the curb prevented the driver of the car from seeing Mrs. Victor step from the curb directly in front of the approaching machine.

BOOZE FLOOD REACHES BORDER

Canada Going Dry, Permits Liquor To Clear Openly And U. S. Enforcement Officers Around Detroit Are All But Swamped.

By Telegraph to The Freeman.

Detroit, Aug. 12.—Sheriff Irving J. Coffin today rushed to the aid of James W. Jordan, federal prohibition enforcement officer, to check the flow of booze from Canada into the United States.

This marked the first act of Detroit officials in a cooperative effort to meet the conditions brought about by the action of Canada's custom officers in permitting liquor cargoes to clear for the United States.

"I'm ready to supply the federal agent with every available man," said the sheriff when informed of the activity along the lower river front.

With the announcement Thursday that the courts had upheld the right of Canadian distillers and brewers to ship liquor into this country, there was a wholesale demand for clearance papers. Load after load of beer and whiskey was presented for clearances and then sent to Sandwich for transfer to speed boats that have been running liquor into this city for months.

Afraid only of the law which formerly made them load their craft in secrecy and under cover of darkness, the experienced rum runners openly prepared for their voyages across the boundary line.

Soap From Clay.

Clay in the "colloidal form," when suitably prepared, may be satisfactorily substituted for a large proportion (up to about 50 per cent) of the fatty acids in soap. Matter may roughly be said to be in the "colloidal form" when it is in an extremely fine state of subdivision. As clay is cheap and soap relatively dear, the substitution of clay in this form for the fatty acids produces a notable reduction in cost. The clay is a real substitute for soap, and not an adulterant. Hot solutions of colloidal clay soap form jellies on cooling and thus this soap not only resembles ordinary soap in appearance, but in cleansing properties it is said to be even better than pure soap. Developments of this interesting discovery will be awaited with interest.—Discovery, London.

Long Name in China.

The Chinese arrant is wonderfully honest and efficient, says a correspondent, writing from China. He commences work early in the morning and seldom gets to bed before late at night. Moreover, he gets no night out or half day off once a week. If nature had not endowed him with a plethora of uncles, aunts and grandmothers, who are obliging enough to die at convenient times, and even to repeat the process if necessity arises, the count of his monstrous title would be too terrible to contemplate. Although the Chinese boy is no plaster saint, and in the game are many worthless specimens, the average untrained boy is usually honest.

Drought Hurts Australian Land.

What the plow is to Canada, drought is to Australia. It rents a land, which otherwise would subsist itself by its own fertility. Of the amazing recuperative powers of Australian land under moderate rain, after drought that has scarified the face of the country into a grim specter of ash-dry powder, there is no doubt. You may ride hundreds of miles through country where the dryness is as that of Eastney's valley of bones, and returning three weeks later may find a green pasture of grass that covers your horse's knees. This will not happen everywhere; but there are innumerable parts of Australia where it is a commonplace of experience.

Fox Ranching in Europe.

Although it is not generally known, quite a number of foxes were sold last year to parties residing in Europe, mainly throughout Sweden, Norway and Switzerland. One rancher who has supplied a number of pairs to these foreigners, states that the industry is spreading in a truly wonderful manner in these countries, and that this year he expects to be able to sell practically all the foxes raised. There is only one drawback at present to a general spread of the industry there, and that is the rather high cost of feeding, but this is being overcome, and the sale of breeding stock at good prices will amply cover the higher expense. The present rate of exchange is also a disadvantage, but this does not seem to affect those who want to start in at the business, as the Europeans are now used to this. There is most certainly a big field in Europe for the fox industry, and that it will some day amount to something big is a surety.

Mrs Rose Gooding

All England is interested in the pathetic case of Mrs. Rose E. Gooding, of Littlehampton, who has been released from Portsmouth Prison, after serving more than eight months of two sentences for crimes of which she has just been proven innocent. Mrs. Gooding, who is the mother of two small children, was sentenced to fourteen months and twelve days on being convicted of writing libellous messages. She appealed, and a decision was rendered against her. An investigation by Scotland Yard, recently completed, proved that it would have been impossible for Mrs. Gooding to have committed the offenses of which she had been convicted and sentenced. She was ordered released by the Court of Criminal Appeal in London.

TO REDUCE DANGEROUS VARICOSE VEINS

People who have swollen veins or bunches should not wait until they reach the bursting point, which means much suffering and loss of time, but should at once secure from any reliable druggist a two-ounce original bottle of Moone's Emerald Oil (full strength).

By using this powerful, yet harmless germicide treatment improvement is noticed in a few days and by its regular use swollen veins will return to their normal size, and sufferers will cease to worry. Moone's Emerald Oil treatment is used by physicians and in hospitals and is guaranteed to accomplish results or money returned.

It reduces all kinds of enlarged glands, goiters and warts and is used exclusively in many large factories as an unfailing first aid to the injured antiseptic. Generous sample on receipt of 15 cents, silver or stamps. International Laboratories, Rochester, N. Y. Your druggist or McBride Stores can supply you.

ROSE WINS TENNIS TROPHY

Randall Rose, former boys' champion of this city, acquired the local tennis title Thursday by winning the annual Forsyth trophy from Donald Mac Fadden in straight sets, 6-3, 6-3, 6-2. The winner gave a wonderful exhibition of mixing short chop strokes with a driving base line game. Mac Fadden showed several flashes of form but each time Rose would uncover enough placements to turn the tide. The well directed lobs of Rose continually caught Mac Fadden close to the net, while the latter netted many comparatively easy drives. Rose showed remarkable ability in covering the court, continually returning Mac Fadden's sharp volleys for placements.

By defeating Abraham Mariene in the finals Thursday 6-3, 2-6, 6-4, Sprague Talbot obtained the boys' championship of this city. The match was the hardest fought contest of the tourney. After Talbot had easily taken the first set, Mariene by beautiful driving captured the second frame and had his opponent 4-2 in the third and deciding set. Here Talbot rallied and by swift service and consistent driving ran out the set. The excellent playing of Mariene was a surprise to all since Talbot was considered the most experienced player.

In the first round of the men's doubles, Herzog and Flannigan won an uphill battle against Purdy and Clearwater, 2-6, 6-4, 6-1. Muller and McCauliff easily triumphed over Ewing and Miller, 6-0, 6-1. Linson and Safford conquered LeFever and Edwards, 6-3, 6-2.

SILK MILLS WON.

Willites Ahead When Score Reverted To Even Inning.

In the Industrial League Thursday evening, the Willite team representing the Willite company made its first appearance in the League, succeeding to the place vacated by the Columbia Shirt company. The game was called in the first half of the seventh by umpire Jordan. At the time of calling the score stood 11-7 in favor of the Willites but on account of a ruling of the League pertaining to games called on account of darkness, the official score was referred back to the last even inning, the 6th, when it was 7-2 in favor of the silk mills. Bruck and Caunitz and Borho were the battery for Willite. Ellsworth and Hoffman and Roosa for silk mills.

Tossing All The Runs.

The Pirates tripped the Cubs in both ends of a double header and forced another half game ahead of the giants. Hamilton and Zinn were the winning pitchers.

Babe Ruth hammered out his 43rd home run and helped the Yanks defeat the Athletics.

The Giants and Dodgers split even. Frisch and Kilduff made home runs in two heavy hitting games.

Risso held the Cardinals safe.

Home of the Sun Dial.
